Concerning satisfaction with the program, respondents were given five options from highly satisfied to highly dissatisfied. For all respondents combined, 36% were highly dissatisfied, and an additional 17% reported they were dissatisfied; a total of 35% reported being either highly satisfied or satisfied; 6% each reported neutral satisfaction or no opinion. Broken down by quantity of shares owned, 90% of large shareholders, 80% of medium shareholders, and 20% of small shareholders reported being highly satisfied or satisfied with the IFQ program. By geographic area, shareowners in the western Gulf reported higher satisfaction than those in the northern and eastern Gulf.

Concerning perceptions of potential outcomes of the IFQ program for the industry, overall respondents agree that red snapper prices have increased, price fluctuations have decreased, that there has been an increased consolidation in the fishery, and that it has become harder for people to enter the fishery. Respondents disagreed over whether crewmembers are better off compared to their situation prior to program implementation. Dr. Keithly noted that the price of red snapper allocation is high in relation to its ex-vessel price (roughly 75%). This has resulted in red snapper becoming a bycatch species for many fishermen, both those who fish their own shares and those who must purchase allocation.

V. Evaluation of Technical Efficiency on the Red Snapper IFQ program - Agar

Dr. Juan Agar presented results of an economic study evaluating the impact of IFQs on the technical efficiency and composition of the US Gulf of Mexico red snapper fishery. The study was prepared by Drs Daniel Solís, Julio del Corral, and Juan Agar of the University of Miami, University of Castilla-La Mancha, and NOAA SEFSC, respectively. Dr. Agar summarized the theoretical background, methodology, data, and discussed the major findings of the study.

Dr. Agar indicated that the study used a stochastic distance function framework to investigate whether the red snapper IFQ program has reduced overcapacity and improved technical efficiency. Preliminary results of the study suggest that fishing capacity in the commercial red snapper sector fell following the implementation of IFQs. The analysis further suggests that the capacity of the vertical line fleet fell by 17%. Dr. Agar indicated that the reduction was mainly driven by attrition. The study did not find significant changes in capacity utilization rates, which measures the proportion of capacity that is effectively utilized. Finally, their analysis showed that overcapacity decreased by 12%. The study also evaluated the technical efficiency of the fleet before and after the implementation of the red snapper IFQ program. Technical efficiency measures whether the use of inputs per unit of output decreased since IFQs participants were free to select the optimal allocation of inputs given that many of the regulatory constraints like trip limits and harvest windows were lifted. Preliminary analyses showed that efficiency gains were driven primarily by the less technically efficient vessels exiting the fishery rather than by significant improvements in technical efficiency for those vessels that remained in the fishery. The study also suggests that the technical efficiency of the vertical line fleet increased by 7% following the implementation of IFQs.

In subsequent discussions, panel members inquired about the data used and noted that conclusions presented by Dr. Agar were in agreement with several previous studies which indicated that the exit of the least efficient vessels was the determining factor in improving technical efficiency. The SESSC then passed the following motion:

Motion: The Socioeconomic SSC agrees that the analysis by Solis, et al. meets current scientific standards, with the understanding that further methodological advancements are needed to fully articulate pre and post regime changes.

VI. Discussion of 5-year IFQ program review process: Michael Jepson

Dr. Jepson discussed the status of the 5-year red snapper IFQ program review and asked the SESSC members what types of analysis they feel would be appropriate, and how the preceding presentations satisfied the needs of the review. SESSC members discussed their role in the process and indicated that they would welcome the opportunity to contribute to the review process once a draft of the 5-year review document was available.

Motion: The Socioeconomic SSC recommends that a synthesis document of the presentations provided at the Oct 2012 Socioeconomic SSC be prepared and reviewed by the Socioeconomic SSC at a future date; that this document identify areas of overlap or inconsistencies that need to be addressed; and that recommendations be made on future research that needs to be conducted and the data necessary to complete those research projects.

VII. Elections

As there was no other business, elections were held. Although not in attendance, former Vice-Chair Stephen Holland became the Chairman. Lee Anderson was nominated to be Vice-Chair, and was elected by group consensus. The meeting concluded at 4:45 p.m.

8 Any other discussion on this motion? It's been moved and 9 seconded. All in favor say aye; all opposed. The motion
10 carries. Mr. Pearce, anything else?

12 MR. PEARCE: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and no.

13
14 CHAIRMAN BOYD: Thank you. Dr. Bortone asked me to just make an 15 announcement that -- I don't know when we're going to end today.
16 That's going to be up to Dr. Shipp and the committee, but if 17 you're trying to get out early today, please be prudent in 18 changing your flight reservations and look at the cost.

20 If you can get out thirty minutes earlier and it costs a lot of 21 money, you might want to just wait to take your flight, but if 22 you can get out hours or even a day earlier, certainly you want
23 to try to do that to get home on a Friday afternoon, but just be 24 prudent with the cost, because changing tickets can get very 25 expensive at the last minute. Dr. Shipp and Reef Fish.

26
27 REEF FISH COMMITTEE REPORT

28
29 DR. SHIPP: I believe everybody has received a copy of the Reef
30 Fish Committee Report. It's rather lengthy and I share some of 31 the malady that you have, Mr. Chairman, and so my Vice Chair is 32 prepared to take over anywhere along the way.

34 The agenda was adopted with the addition under Other Business of 35 a discussion of the venting tool requirement and permitting
36 issues with respect to headboat vessel capacity. The minutes of 37 the August 21, 2012 Reef Fish Committee meeting were adopted as 38 written.

40 The first item was the Red Snapper IFQ Five-Year Review, Tab B,
41 Number 3(a). Dr. Jessica Stephen presented the red snapper
42 five-year review document. Dr. Stephen discussed the legal 43 requirements for IFQ, the objectives of the IFQ program, and the 44 main data sources used in the review document.

46 Dr. Stephen indicated that the IFQ review document addresses
47 several issues, including socioeconomic outcomes, biological 48 outcomes, and social impacts of the IFQ program. The review

1 also addresses safety at sea, enforcement, program
2 administration, and, changes recommended to date.

4 Dr. Lasseter summarized the Socioeconomic SSC, SESSC, meeting
5 report, Tab B, Number 4, regarding the five-year review of the 6 red snapper IFQ program. The SESSC heard presentations on the 7 red snapper IFQ 2011 annual report including trends within the 8 red snapper IFQ program by Doctors Jessica Stephen and Juan Agar
9 and the results and analysis from the Gulf of Mexico red snapper
10 IFQ program survey by Dr. Walter Keithly.

12 The SESSC also heard a report on the evaluation of technical 13 efficiency on the red snapper IFQ program by Dr. Agar on behalf
14 of his coauthors, Dr. Solis and Dr. del Corral.

15
16 The SESSC then passed the following motion. The Socioeconomic
17 SSC agrees that the analysis by Solis, et al., meets current 18 scientific standards, with the understanding that further
19 methodological advancements are needed to fully articulate pre
20 and post-regime changes. The SESSC also recommended that a
21 synthesis document of the presentations provided at the October
22 2012 Socioeconomic SSC be prepared and reviewed by the SESSC at 23 a future date.

25 Dr. Larry Abele presented his observations on the red snapper
26 IFQ program, Tab B, Number 4(a). Dr. Abele discussed some of 27 the pros and cons of the IFQ program and presented his 28 calculations relative to the dollar amount that was granted to 29 initial IFQ share recipients. The calculations were based on 30 current, median, and average share prices. Dr. Abele then
31 discussed the potential use of auctions as a means to compensate
32 the public.

34 Economic Evaluation of Red Snapper Allocation, Tab B, Number 5, 35 Dr. Juan Agar presented a study evaluating the economic 36 efficiency of the allocation of red snapper resources between 37 the commercial and recreational sectors, Tab B, Number 5.

38
39 Dr. Agar reviewed the theory behind economically efficient
40 resource allocations between two sectors, including the concept
41 of willingness to pay. Dr. Agar noted that the recreational 42 analysis was based on a 2003 survey.

44 Additional challenges included the voluntary and self-reported
45 nature of IFQ allocation prices and the large number of zeroes
46 reported. Dr. Agar indicated that, based on the estimated 47 willingness to pay, economic efficiency could potentially be 48 improved by reallocating red snapper resources.

2 The committee discussed limitations of the study and considered,
3 but withdrew, a motion to recommend that the council not
4 allocate any increase in red snapper ACL until the council
5 approves allocation of the increase among the various 6 stakeholders and sectors.

8 Dr. Assane Diagne summarized the recommendations of the SESSC
9 and noted that the SESSC accepted the findings and conclusions
10 of the allocation study. The SESSC also stated that while the 11 results of the study indicate that the marginal value of a 12 recreationally caught red snapper is likely higher than the 13 marginal value of a commercially caught red snapper, given the 14 data that was used, it cannot specify the potential efficiency
15 gains from possible quota shifts, because it does not know how 16 the marginal valuations will change with the switch.

18 Following committee discussion, the committee passed the 19 following motion. By a voice vote without opposition, the 20 committee recommends, and I so move, that the council untable
21 the discussion of Reef Fish Amendment 28.

23 CHAIRMAN BOYD: I am going to ask for counsel to give me some 24 counsel here. We have a motion that was tabled previously and 25 my understanding is that we have to have someone from the 26 prevailing side of that tabling to bring it back off of the 27 table and we do have some people on that committee that were on 28 the prevailing side and so is that a motion in order?

30 MR. GRIMES: I guess I think you have a number of ways you could
31 deal with this, but I would say that really your motion to table
32 before was improperly characterized as a motion to table. It
33 should have been a motion to postpone to a time certain.

35 What you have now is a motion to change that to bring it back
36 before the body and I think that can be made by any individual
37 and you have -- I may be wrong here, but you have a committee
38 motion to do just that. It says to untable, but essentially,
39 that's not really accurate. It's a motion to bring it back
40 before the body.

42 Technically, a motion to untable would not be debatable, but
43 since that -- We made an error before and let's not pile error
44 upon error. I would say this is a motion to bring it back
45 before the body and it's debatable and it can be made by the 46 committee or any member.

48 CHAIRMAN BOYD: Based on that advice, we have a committee motion

The Socioeconomic SSC (SESSC) meeting convened at 9 a.m. Before adopting the agenda, the SESSC added a discussion of allocation to other business. The SESSC discussed the definition of incremental shifts in allocation and reviewed recommendations made during previous discussions on the economic efficiency studies presented by Drs. Agar and Carter (April and October 2012). The SESSC indicated that while the analyses discussed were appropriate for evaluating the economic efficiency of allocations, the analyses do not specify the efficient allocation. The SESSC would be more supportive of management measures that allow for market-based mechanisms of reallocation, such as inter-sector trading, rather than a Council action that determines the reallocation shift. The willingness to pay estimates provided in the studies suggest that there are potential gains in efficiency from trade. However, use of the study results to determine the reallocation shift is not supported by the SESSC. The members noted that if the Council intends to reallocate by a management shift, then additional data and analyses are required as the current analysis is insufficient. The SESSC could advise the Council on the data and analyses needed to make a specific recommendation, have NMFS conduct the analyses, and allow the SESSC to review it, expressing this through the following motion:

The Committee recommends that the SESSC develop a specific set of analyses and data to address the allocation issue of red snapper in the Gulf of Mexico fishery. These recommendations prepared by the SESSC would be presented to the Council to determine if they are willing to recommend that NMFS and Council staff conduct and complete the analyses.

Members discussed economic definitions of marginal and incremental changes, noting that red snapper allocation changes of 3, 5, and 10% are not marginal changes. Members were not supportive of reallocation discussions being based on the economic efficiency analysis, as the models do not specify what the economically efficient allocation would be. It is possible that any new allocation could be just as, and possibly more, economically inefficient compared with the existing allocation, particularly if the Council elects to make larger than marginal changes in the allocation. Also, some members indicated that other factors than economic efficiency need to be considered in any reallocation decision (e.g., effects on crew employment, businesses, and communities). Members felt that the Council should think about reallocation in a different way. The following motion was then passed.

The Committee does not support a reallocation between sectors of the GOM red snapper as large as 1% without giving strong consideration to the market transferability across the two sectors.

Dr. Jessica Stephen then presented the Red Snapper IFQ Program 5-year Review. After reviewing the data and analyses conducted to examine each program goal, Dr. Stephen asked the SESSC for recommendations of additional analyses or program modifications.

Concerning the goal to reduce overcapitalization, the SESSC suggested analyses other than technical efficiency be used, that look at capacity directly. Staff noted that an analysis by Solis et al. was underway that utilizes the suggested methodologies. In looking at capacity, the SESSC also noted that focusing on one species at a time in a multi-species fishery is problematic and suggested that the focus be on the agent (i.e., the fishing unit) rather than the fish stock. Other committee suggestions included establishing a program evaluation framework and metrics, including a budget for longitudinal data collections and analysis, and impacts on other stakeholders such as non-participants and communities. Members felt that an approach was needed that produces unified results to look at program goals holistically, rather than considering biological, economic, and social impacts separately. Staff from NMFS noted that the agency is developing economic and social indicators of performance for catch share programs, and that it would be preferable to use and build off of those indicators rather than create a new set of indicators.

For the goal of optimizing yield, the SESSC discussed the definition of optimal. The discussion focused on inactive shares and issues with use-it-or-lose-it provisions. In mitigating the race to fish, the SESSC discussed the analysis in terms of whether the data used were the most appropriate to address whether the IFQ program was the causal factor leading to the end of the derby fishery.

Reviewing the social impacts, additional analyses were recommended, but it was recognized that needed data would have to be collected first. Specifically, social indicators for communities most dependent on the fishery were asked to be included. They noted that employment analyses were problematic because of the multi-species nature of the fishery, making it difficult to tease out impacts specific to the IFQ program. In making recommendations to the program concerning this goal, committee members repeated the need for an analysis that looks across species and also examines how non-program participants have been impacted.

Additional issues discussed by the committee included share ownership by non-reef fish permit holders, participation of non-consumptive users in the program, and issues with use-it-or-lose-it provisions. Responding to the issue of who (share owners or allocation leasees) should pay the 3% cost recovery fee, the committee generally felt that the price ultimately paid for allocation would include the fee, whether it was charged to the fisherman directly or paid previously by the shareowner.

The committee then provided comments on the presentation for a TAC-share fishery given by Dr. Abele at the January 2013 Special Reef Fish Committee meeting. Members addressed the idea of gifting the resource and rent from the resource to initial shareholders, noting that the value also includes that value previously located in vessels, permits, experience, and other investments prior to the program. Other comments noted that an auction could introduce inefficiency to the system by giving equal access to less experienced operations, and that an auction would change the incentive structure of the program and could cause harm to people's investments and faith in the program and management. They noted that public resource auctions are used successfully for previously unexploited resources and typically not for resources with long histories of exploitation. They also noted that peer-reviewed literature has criticized the work on auctions referenced in the presentation, and questioned the use of auctions in fisheries. The SESSC then passed the following motion.

Should the Gulf Council consider auctions in fisheries, the Committee recommends that the Council consult the contemporary economics literature on utilizing auctions in fisheries as distinct from the general literature on use of auctions to allocate other natural resources, as much of the literature suggests that the auctions of fisheries resources are not a superior fisheries management tool.

The issue of evaluating IFQ programs separately, by species or species group, makes it difficult to draw conclusions because it is a multi-species fishery. The committee felt they need to look at impacts and behavior holistically to examine change in the red snapper fishery, and passed the following motion.

Within the context of attempting to manage one species or species group efficiently, that could result in unintended consequences for other species or species groups, the Committee recommends having the Council conduct broader scale analyses that focus on the primary decision agent in the fishery, (for example, focusing on the fishing unit of analysis instead of individual fish stocks) across regulated fisheries to investigate displacement or shifts in effort across those fisheries.

In discussion, the SESSC defined the "fishing unit of analysis" as the decision-making unit (vessels, vessel owners, or shareholders), in contrast to individual fish stocks.

The Committee postponed further discussion of the role of the SESSC until the next meeting. They expressed interest in holding a meeting or webinar as soon as possible to address their first motion regarding guidelines for an analysis to consider reallocation. The meeting adjourned at 5 p.m.

This summary provides the recommendations made by the SESSC as a supplement to the verbatim minutes of the meeting.

The meeting convened at 9 am. In the absence of both the Chair and Vice-Chair, Mike Jepson, former chair, assumed the role of chair.

Drs. Juan Agar and David Carter of the Southeast Fisheries Science Center indicated that the economic efficiency of the current red snapper allocation between the commercial and recreational sectors was assessed in a previous study. Drs. Agar and Carter provided an economic evaluation of the alternative red snapper allocations considered in Reef Fish Amendment 28.

Dr. Agar presented the commercial analysis, which used a proxy benefit function based on allocation prices to model changes in net benefits to the commercial sector as a function of quota levels. Explanatory variables used in modeling monthly red snapper IFQ allocation prices included dockside prices, harvesting costs, red snapper quotas, and temporal dummy variables. Dr. Agar indicated that fuel prices were used as a proxy for harvesting costs. Mean estimates for net benefits forgone ranged from $1.2 million for a decrease in the commercial red snapper quota from 51% to 48% of the red snapper TAC to $4.0 million for a resulting commercial quota of 41% of the red snapper TAC. Limitations discussed by Dr. Agar included challenges in identifying arms-length IFQ allocation transactions and the non-inclusion of forgone benefits to post-harvest sectors. Dr. Agar also indicated that the statistical approach used is more suitable for the prediction of small changes in allocations.

Dr. Carter discussed the assumptions of his modelling approach and presented the recreational analysis. Dr. Carter indicated that the analysis was based on a choice experiment survey and that the willingness-to-pay per fish utilized in his assessment was constant over the number of trips. Based on an average weight per red snapper of 6.36 lbs, the net willingness-to-pay was estimated at $11 per pound of red snapper. Dr. Carter indicated that aggregate changes in economic value for the recreational sector ranged from $2.72 million for an increase in the recreational red snapper quota from 49% to 52% of the red snapper TAC to $9.06 million for an increase in the recreational quota from 49% to 59% of the red snapper TAC.

Drs. Carter and Agar then discussed the net changes in economic value expected to result from the alternative reallocation included in Reef Fish Amendment 28. Drs. Carter and Agar indicated that net changes in economic value ranged from $1.52 million for an increase in the recreational red snapper quota from 49% to 52% of the red snapper TAC (and a decrease in the commercial quota from 51% to 48% of the red snapper TAC) to $5.06 million for an increase in the recreational allocation from 49% to 59% of the red snapper TAC (and a decrease of the commercial quota from 51% to 41% of the red snapper TAC). In concluding remarks, questions raised by Drs. Carter and Agar included:

- Do the assumptions hold over the range of alternatives?
- How can we compare market and nonmarket sectors?
- Can we really compare values across sectors, empirically?
- Have enough resources been "allocated" to allocation?
- Role of market-based approaches in the recreational sector

The Committee discussed the presentation extensively in terms of the assumptions and methods, and for their analytical usefulness for the evaluation of red snapper allocation alternatives under consideration in Reef Fish Amendment 28. The discussion noted the limitations and assumptions of the data and analyses, and debated their appropriateness for analyzing the allocation shifts of the magnitude considered in the amendment. Other themes of the discussion included the property right structures in the commercial and recreational sectors nature and whether resource reallocation would significantly mitigate the ever shorter fishing seasons in the recreational sector. The Committee ultimately passed the following motion.

Motion: The SE SSC moves to accept the analytical methodology developed by the SEFSC for application to the evaluation of the change in economic benefits associated with reallocation of GOM red snapper as proposed in RF Amendment 28. Motion passed 5-4.

The ensuing discussion considered the purpose of the amendment and alternate methods of addressing allocation issues and the problems in the recreational sector, e.g., market-based (incentive-based) approaches. The Committee then passed the following motions.

Motion: The SE SSC encourages the Council to look at first best i.e., incentive based mechanisms vs. second best, i.e. regulatory actions when making allocation decisions away from the current allocation. Motion passed unanimously.

Motion: The SE SSC moves to encourage the Council to utilize experimental methods to test the efficacy of alternative incentive based institutions. Motion passed unanimously.

Some members of the Committee expressed concern with how these motions would be understood by the Council, and how these interpretations may affect policy changes. Some members pointed out that requests for additional analyses are part of the Council decision-making process. The Committee then passed the following motion.

Motion: The SE SSC moves to have the Council consider the suite of other socio-economic net benefits, such as impacts to communities, value chains, and regulatory wealth transfers, that aren't captured in the Agar/Carter study. Motion passed unanimously.

Finally, the Committee discussed the data limitations of the analyses, such as the sample sizes and time scales. One member noted that the methods proposed were adequate but there are concerns over the data available. The Committee then passed the following motion.

Motion: The SE SSC encourages the Council to consider the limitations of the data utilized in the SEFSC analysis for reallocation, for Amendment 28, as the model predicts outside the bounds of both data sets. Motion carried with one opposed

In other business, input was sought of committee members about allocation amendments in which resources are reallocated away from a sector that does not catch its allotted quota, e.g., king mackerel. The committee suggested that the benefits derived from catch and release fisheries may provide useful information to analyze these reallocation measures.

The Committee plans to convene by webinar before the February 2014 Council meeting to discuss suggested updates to the analyses, including the provision of confidence intervals for the estimates provided. The meeting ended shortly before 5 pm.

1 DR. ASSANE DIAGNE: Also, Mr. Chair, I believe Sherry Larkin is 2 on the call, too.

4 ADOPTION OF AGENDA

6 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Sherry, are you there? Sherry Larkin is 7 absent. Also with us today are Juan Agar and David Carter from 8 the Southeast Fisheries Science Center. Last call for Sherry, 9 Alexander, Ebenezer, or Kurt.

11 I presume you all have received a copy of the agenda. It was 12 emailed two weeks ago. On the agenda we have seven items:
13 Adoption of the Agenda, Approval of the Minutes, Economic 14 Evaluation of Alternative Red Snapper Allocations: Update
15 Analyses Presentation by Carter and Agar, a Discussion of the 16 Economic Effects of the Allocation in Amendment 28 by Diagne,
17 Social Effects of Reallocation in Amendment 28 by Lasseter, and 18 then Discussion on Recommendations to the Council and any Other
19 Business. Would anyone like to make any amendment to the agenda
20 before we proceed? I guess we will say the agenda is adopted as 21 sent out.

23 Approval of the Minutes of the last meeting is the next vote,
24 which I was not present at and so I can't comment on that, but 25 does anyone wish to make any amendments to the minutes of the 26 last meeting that was sent out? Hearing none, is anyone opposed
27 to adopting the minutes as they were sent out?

28
29 APPROVAL OF MINUTES

30
31 DR. KEITHLY: I will make the motion to adopt the minutes as 32 they were sent out.

34 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: All in favor accepting the minutes; anyone
35 opposed to accepting the minutes say nay. The minutes are 36 adopted from the last meeting. Thank you. Thank you, Assane,
37 for putting that altogether and distributing them. Item Number
38 III is a presentation by Carter and Agar of the Economic 39 Evaluation of Alternative Red Snapper Allocation: Update
40 Analyses.

42 DR. DIAGNE: David and Juan, which one of you has it on their 43 computer to be set as the presenter?

45 ECONOMIC EVALUATION OF ALTERNATIVE RED SNAPPER ALLOCATIONS: DATA
46 AND SUGGESTED METHODS

47
48 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Everyone should be seeing the slides on your

1 computer screen now, the PowerPoint slides.

3 DR. DIAGNE: Mr. Chair, at this point, we are going to mute
4 everyone except for David Carter.

6 DR. JUAN AGAR: Welcome back and I hope you had a pleasant
7 holiday break. Today, David and I want to offer an update of 8 our earlier analysis, based on the recommendations of the SSC
9 back in November of 2013.

11 Briefly, the SSC wanted us to include some confidence intervals
12 in our analysis and so that's what we did and now we want to 13 share some of those results. To remind everybody, we were asked
14 to investigate essentially the economic effects of alternative
15 commercial/recreational allocations.

17 Specifically, Amendment 28 listed five different alternatives.
18 Alternative 2 essentially changed the allocation formula and it
19 granted a 3 percent increase to the recreational sector.
20 Alternative 3 increased the allocation by 5 percent to the 21 recreational sector and Alternative 4 by 10 percent, whereas 22 Alternatives 5 and 6 basically increase the allocation to the 23 recreational sector by 75 and 100 percent of any increases above
24 9.12 million pounds.

26 Now let me turn to the commercial sector analysis. Like we 27 discussed back in November, the framework is very simple. We 28 basically wanted to estimate a relationship where we defined
29 commercial net benefits as a function of quota levels.

31 I essential proxy net benefits using allocation prices because 32 fishermen will tend to purchase additional units of quota as 33 long as the expected net revenue exceeds or equals the 34 allocation price and that the margin would expect that the net
35 revenue of the last unit purchased would equal the allocation
36 price and so that's kind of the rationale behind the framework
37 used for the commercial sector.

39 Essentially, what I tried to do is estimate this allocation
40 price relationship as a function of dockside price, harvesting
41 cost, quota, and temporal dummies and to estimate the economic 42 effects, I took the benefits under the status quo and then 43 examined what happened as we reduced the allocation to the 44 commercial sector, in this case the five different reallocation
45 proposals.

47 Graphically, in 2012, there were 3.71 million pounds. In 2013,
48 the quota was increased to 5.06, which is our status quo case.

1 Say one of the alternatives wants to reduce the allocation to
2 the commercial sector to 4.06. What I would do to estimate the
3 economic benefits is essentially integrate under that allocation
4 price relationship.

6 Another point I want to make is a lot of our models are geared
7 towards looking at the small changes. In the case of this
8 exercise, between 2012 and 2013, there was a 36 percent increase
9 in the quota, which we should look at the results with caution,
10 because most of our models are geared towards looking at 11 marginal or very small changes.

13 Going a little bit more into the methods, I essentially
14 estimated a reduced form specification, similar to the one that 15 Newell et al. had done when they looked at their analysis of 16 lease prices in the New Zealand market.

18 I used the OLS model, where I model monthly allocation prices as 19 a function of dockside prices, cost, quota, and quarterly and 20 yearly dummies. The data I used, like I mentioned earlier, came 21 from the Regional Office and also from the Bureau of Labor
22 Statistics, which I used the diesel number two index as a proxy
23 of harvesting cost and unlike the previous year analysis, now I
24 had an extra year of data and so I ended up with seventy-two 25 observations, basically six years of monthly data.

27 When I estimate the relationship of allocation prices as a
28 function of dockside prices, cost, and quota, when I plot it
29 against quota, I end up with this relationship and this 30 relationship also shows the confidence intervals around the 31 mean.

32
33 When I integrate under this relationship and look at changes
34 based from the status quo of 5.06 million pounds, what I find is 35 that when the quota is reduced by 3 percent, I get that the mean
36 foregone benefits is $1.2 million. This is the less onerous
37 option to the commercial sector. Underneath, I show the 38 confidence intervals.

40 Alternative 2 is a 3 percent decrease to the recreational
41 sector, again what's found to be the less onerous options,
42 whereas the most onerous option was Alternative 4, which 43 basically took away 10 percent of the commercial quota and gave 44 it to the recreational sector. In that case, I estimated that 45 the foregone benefits, net benefits, were around $4 million.

47 Alternative Number 6, which basically granted 100 percent of the 48 increases in the quota when the quota was above 9.12 million

1 pounds, in that case the foregone benefits to the commercial
2 sector is $3.5 million.

4 Next, before passing it off to David, I want to reiterate some
5 of the limitations of the analysis. One is data limitations.
6 We can't really -- About 80 percent of the observations had very
7 low transaction figures, meaning that they were less than a
8 dollar or all zeros and so we can't really identify true arms-
9 length transactions and so that's a limitation of the analysis
10 in the model.

12 Another limitation of the analysis is, like I mentioned before, 13 between 2012 and 2013, there was a 36 percent increase in the 14 quota and again, most of the economic models look at small 15 changes and so have to be wary about some of the forecasts.

17 Lastly, another limitation of the model is that it only focuses 18 on the harvesting sector and it doesn't look at consumer
19 surplus, for example. It doesn't capture the post-harvest
20 sector benefits. That's another limitation of the model.

22 Last, before I pass it on to David, as I was going over my
23 model, I noticed a slight mistake in the forecasting, which I am
24 going to revise, but I basically made a mistake when I did my 25 predictions, which means that the allocation prices are actually
26 about 8 percent lower than the ones I predicted in this model.
27 However, the relative magnitude of the different alternatives
28 follows the same pattern. Now I would like to pass it to David.

30 DR. DAVID CARTER: Hello, everyone. I am going to talk about 31 the recreational sector analysis and I guess I can start with my 32 first assumption and that is that you guys have read our report.

34 We didn't have a report prior to this or to the presentation we 35 made in November, but now we have a report that Assane should 36 have distributed and like Juan, my analysis in the recreational 37 sector follows closely what we had reported or what we had 38 presented in November and so what I'm going to show here is just 39 an update, primarily relating to the calculation of the 40 confidence intervals that was requested by I think Kurt Schnier.
41 I think it was him that requested that.

43 Just to update everyone or refresh everyone on the simple method
44 that was used to calculate change in economic value in the 45 recreational sector, we just looked at the change in the 46 allocation and multiplied it by a net benefit per pound and this 47 is a simple approach that has been used many, many times in 48 amendment analysis and this simple approach was taken largely in

1 the interest of time, but there is also data and model
2 limitations that led us down this road.

4 The net benefit per pound was calculated as the net benefit for
5 a trip that caught two red snapper, that was going after red
6 snapper and caught two and kept two red snapper and we simply 7 divided that by two for the number of red snapper and then that 8 converted to pounds per fish.

10 The pounds per fish used was -- The same poundage we used in the 11 prior assessment of efficiency, I guess back in 2012, in the 12 6.34 pounds per fish -- We have some discussion in the report
13 about how sensitive these results may or may not be to the 14 assumption about the weight per fish.

16 The main thing and the main economics in this calculation is how 17 we come up with the net benefit for two red snapper on a trip.
18 Conceptually, we couldn't just take -- The presumption is that
19 you can't just take the total benefit of a trip for two red
20 snapper, because the way we set things up -- If the season is 21 extended, which is what we assumed is going to happen as more
22 allocation goes to the recreational sector, as these 23 alternatives have been described -- As more harvest goes to the 24 recreational sector, that will be implemented via an increase in 25 the season and no change in the bag limit or size limit or 26 anything.

28 We're assuming that those additional days will be coming from 29 trips that are already occurring now, say for another species,
30 and that will redirect over to harvest red snapper.

32 Therefore, the net benefit of one of those additional days will 33 be the total benefit of a trip for the red snapper with two fish
34 minus the total benefit of a trip for their next preferred
35 species.

37 These will be for people that would have taken a red snapper
38 trip on a given day if it was available and so this is 39 conceptually how we came up with the net benefit measure that we 40 used in the numerator of that previous equation.

42 I am not going to go through the details here, although I am
43 happy to answer questions. We went through it in more detail
44 during the last presentation and it is in the report, but 45 essentially we took the results from the 2003 stated preference
46 choice experiment, the analysis of that, which was published I
47 guess in 2012 by myself and Christopher Liese, and we used those 48 results to come up with this net benefit for two red snapper per

1 trip.

3 We calculated, simulated, 10,000 anglers and then picked off the 4 ones that would have preferred red snapper and subtracted off
5 the -- Took the total benefit of two red snapper and subtracted
6 off the total benefit of the next best alternative for those 7 anglers and for that group of anglers, we calculated the mean or 8 median or mean and median of this net benefit measure.

10 That was what I reported last time and Kurt had suggested we run
11 this experiment 10,000 more times and then use the results to 12 get the upper and lower bound of the mean and I also did the 13 median. Again, if anyone has any questions about the actual 14 mechanics in here, I am happy to discuss it.

16 For now, I will just show the results. This is in 2012 dollars.
17 The simulated mean was $142.11 for two red snapper on any given 18 trip that was targeting red snapper, preferring red snapper, and 19 the upper and lower bounds are shown there, $130 and $154. I
20 think it's like plus or minus 8 percent and similarly for the

23 The number we're going to be using for the analysis is this
24 $142.11 and then that was the numerator. We divide that by 2
25 times 6.34 and get the net benefits per pound, which I believe 26 was the same as I presented last time, the mean, and it was 27 $11.21 and then the upper and lower results are shown here as 28 well.

30 Just using that $11.00 in the formula that I presented in the 31 first slide and multiplying the $11.00 times the change in 32 harvest to the recreational sector for each of the alternatives,
33 here is the results.

35 It's purely linear in the amount of fish going to the 36 recreational sector. The smallest amount of fish -- Alternative
37 2 is showing the smallest benefits to the recreational sector
38 with the largest amount -- Alternative 4 is showing the largest 39 benefits going to the recreational sector.

41 Just to refresh everyone's memory, there were several 42 assumptions made in the course of this analysis and we do go
43 over them hopefully in sufficient detail in the report, but just 44 to summarize, we assumed that there were no new anglers or trips
45 and that this additional harvest provided via extra days would 46 be absorbed by people redirecting from other species.

48 Another assumption was we assumed that all trips harvest two red

1 snapper. That's the bag limit, but, of course, trips could have
2 and do harvest less than that.

4 Then we had some old data from 2003. That was the data, the 5 choice experiment, that we used to calculate the values and then 6 also, we only measured value to the angler and not values to the 7 for-hire sector operators and that is other producer surplus
8 estimates.

10 The second column just shows what the effect of relaxing some of 11 these assumptions would be on the results and in all cases shown 12 here, relaxing these assumptions would make the numbers even 13 higher than were presented in the previous slide.

14
15 To summarize what Juan and I have done here, here is the updated
16 net economic benefits evaluated at the mean and so, again,
17 they're purely linear in the amount of harvest going away from 18 the commercial sector to the recreational sector.

20 Just to put in some more information or another way of looking 21 at this, using the information about confidence intervals that 22 Juan and I calculated, what's shown there now in yellow, that's 23 just net benefits that were in that last column in the previous 24 slide.

26 You could also say, all right, what if we looked at the lower
27 bound estimates from the recreational sector and the upper bound
28 from the commercial sector and this is what the net benefits
29 would be. Clearly they're lower than the mean estimates and 30 similarly, you could go the other way around and look at the 31 lower bound commercial estimates and compare those with the 32 upper bound recreational estimates and, of course, in that case
33 the results are even larger. The net benefits are even larger.

35 The key thing to note here is that no matter which way you look 36 at it, the net benefits are positive for all of the 37 alternatives, at least within the bounds of the analysis here.

38
39 Something to note about or a few things to note about the 40 confidence intervals that Juan and I calculated is they 41 primarily addressed parameter uncertainty with our models that 42 we've estimated.

44 The recreational one also looked at or also accounted for angler
45 heterogeneity, that degree of uncertainty or that notion of 46 uncertainty. Juan's and mine didn't deal with different types
47 of model specifications and so there's uncertainty involved with 48 that.

2 In the case of the commercial analysis, as Juan talked about,
3 the range of allocations considered now are outside of the 4 bounds of historical data and so there's uncertainty with regard
5 to the extrapolation and then he also talked about, at greater 6 length in the previous presentation and in the report, about the 7 assumptions having to be made with regard to the allocation
8 prices and so there is uncertainty in that realm as well.
10 On the recreational side, there is also uncertainty with regard
11 to the weight per fish and the number of fish per trip, as I
12 talked about earlier. I think at this point that's all we have 13 and we can open it for questions.
15 DR. DIAGNE: Thank you, David and Juan. We will turn it over
16 the Steve Holland, our Chair, and, Steve, if I may ask, let's
17 just go ahead and do another round of voice recognition and read
18 the list of Socioeconomic SSC participants, if you would,
19 please, before you open it up to questions. Thank you.
20

45 DR. GENTNER: This is Brad Gentner. I want to jump in real
46 quick and say I am here. I was still muted by the moderator
47 when you called my name the first time and so we may be having a 48 problem with that.

2 DR. KEITHLY: This is Walter. I was here too. I don't know if
3 you heard me or not.
5 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Oh, boy. Assane, do we have everybody un-
6 muted?
8 DR. DIAGNE: I believe so. Let me check with Karen just for a
9 quick second. It seems to me that there is a delay between the 10 time it's done and that we said it.
12 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Maybe I better go through it one more time.

22
23 DR. DIAGNE: Yes and Kurt is not here, too.
24
25 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: I guess those are the only three. Assane, 26 should we ask people to press the holding the hands up button or 27 should --
28
29 DR. DIAGNE: I think perhaps to avoid some of the technical 30 difficulties, we will just go ahead and have people take turns
31 speaking without muting anybody. I would also like to say that 32 we have several council members on the call and if they have 33 some questions at some point, Mr. Chair, you can recognize them, 34 if you would. Thank you.
35
36 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Okay. Would the council members like to 37 introduce themselves? Does anyone have any questions for David
38 and Juan regarding their presentation?
39
40 DR. HOLIMAN: I've got a question. David, can you hear me?
41
42 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Is David Carter on the line? Mr. Moderator, 43 we are missing David Carter.
44
45 DR. KEITHLY: Mr. Chairman, while we're trying to contact David,
46 may I ask a question?
47
48 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Yes, you may.

2 DR. KEITHLY: Could you, as Chairman, give us some guidance as 3 to what is expected of this meeting? Let me elaborate. At the 4 last meeting, we went through these reports already by Dr. Agar
5 and Dr. Carter and we discussed them in some detail.

7 When we left that meeting or right before it, and we discussed a
8 future meeting, we decided that this meeting could be via 9 webinar, because we only had certain items to bring up, such as 10 the confidence intervals. Is the purpose of this meeting to 11 rehash everything that we went through at the last meeting or 12 simply to address the issues that were brought up at the end of 13 the last meeting?

15 DR. DIAGNE: If I may, Mr. Chair, given that you didn't have the 16 opportunity to participate also in the last meeting, the purpose
17 of this meeting is simply to address the updates that the group
18 requested and I believe both David and Juan mentioned in their
19 presentations that they were offering, I guess for your review, 20 the confidence intervals for their respective estimates and 21 applying those to the net benefits.

23 The purpose of today's meeting is not to re-discuss the 24 methodology and what was discussed in November, I believe was 25 our last meeting, but simply for you to look at what updates
26 were done and any other issues that you would see fit to bring 27 up.

29 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Thank you. Does that answer your question, 30 Walter?

31
32 DR. KEITHLY: Yes, that answers my question.

33
34 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Okay. Is David Carter available for 35 questions?

37 DR. CARTER: Yes, I'm here and I'm un-muted.

38
39 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Okay. I believe Steve Holiman has a question
40 for you.

42 DR. HOLIMAN: David, here's my question. Your results with 43 respect to relaxing the assumptions, my assumption is that your 44 summary effects there refer to the estimation of total benefits
45 and not to the estimation of the value per pound. Is that 46 correct?

48 DR. CARTER: They are one in the same, because it's just that

1 right-hand side of that multiplication.
3 DR. HOLIMAN: Are you sure about that, because when you say no
4 new anglers or trips, if you allowed new anglers and trips, you
5 would allow an increase in benefits. However, the value per 6 pound of fish would still be that eleven whatever, would it not?
8 DR. CARTER: Right and it refers to the results in general and 9 so our measures of --
11 DR. HOLIMAN: Correct and so it would be neutral with respect to 12 the value per pound for the first assumption on effort. I am
13 assuming the last assumption, because, again, it has nothing to 14 do with the for-hire sector, correct?
16 DR. CARTER: Right.
17
18 DR. HOLIMAN: Do we still not know with respect to the effect of 19 using data for 2003?
21 DR. CARTER: Right.
22
23 DR. HOLIMAN: I don't know what the effect would be with respect
24 to all trips harvest two red snapper. Do you agree with that or 25 disagree or --
26
27 DR. CARTER: I am not sure if I got the last part. It was 28 trailing off a little bit.
29
30 DR. HOLIMAN: Okay. I've got no effect with effort and I don't 31 know what -- I don't have a feeling with regards to your second 32 category, the two red snapper.
33
34 DR. CARTER: Okay.
35
36 DR. HOLIMAN: I also would come up with a question mark on the 37 2003 data and I would say no effect with respect to the for-hire
38 sector.
40 DR. CARTER: With regard to the second assumption, if you had 41 allowed them to harvest one fish -- If you assume, for example, 42 there was only one fish, then just by the definition of that 43 formula, the benefits would be higher.
45 DR. HOLIMAN: For that first fish.
46
47 DR. CARTER: First of all, the benefit of the first fish -- It
48 was relatively higher, but besides that, just the formula, the

1 simple formula, that had in the denominator the number of fish
2 and so it had two times whatever, 6.34. It was two fish times
3 6.34 pounds per fish. If that was one, then that number would 4 be smaller and the whole thing would be bigger.

6 DR. HOLIMAN: Okay, because kind of what I'm struggling with is 7 the value for the first fish would be more than the value of the 8 second fish and is the value that we're actually using kind of 9 an average or a higher and a lower?

11 DR. CARTER: The value we're using includes the first and the 12 second fish.

14 DR. HOLIMAN: Correct. The first and the second and so arguably 15 it might be argued to be an average across the two. For 16 instance, an eleven-dollar-per-pound and a thirteen-dollar-per-
17 pound average out to twelve. That is total benefits and that's 18 with respect to dollars per pound of fish.

21
22 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Any other questions?

23
24 DR. ROBERTS: I apologize that I wasn't at the last meeting, but 25 I have a question in terms of progress on something that was 26 said in the original report and it basically relates to have the 27 authors made any progress on finding a means to use more recent 28 data in the recreational sector?

30 DR. CARTER: 2003 is the most recent year for this particular 31 type of survey that we used in this analysis. We're doing an 32 update of this type of survey right now in the Gulf of Mexico
33 and we won't have those results until probably later this year, 34 if not early next year. I don't know if that answers your 35 question.

37 DR. ROBERTS: A follow-up, if I may. The next question that
38 pops into mind then is if we're using 2003 data, the authors
39 must have some decisions they made concerning the unworthiness
40 in applicability of the data that's in the recreational sector
41 since that time and my question generally is if you looked at it
42 and found it unsuitable, is it an empirical thing that it
43 doesn't fit into something or is it a quality issue?

45 DR. CARTER: It's more of, I guess as you say, an empirical 46 question. That is it doesn't necessarily fit for this type of 47 analysis or there are some other estimates that have been done
48 that the results are very similar.

2 We have a summary of all of the valuation done for the
3 recreational sector with regard to red snapper in a paper that
4 was published in 2012 and it has a list of all the different
5 estimates that have been done probably in the past twenty years
6 or so and in the end, we decided that, based on that review,
7 that this was the most appropriate result to use.

9 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Any other questions?

10
11 DR. GENTNER: I would like to point out too, regarding that,
12 that this is -- At the last meeting, we decided that this was 13 the best available science and passed a motion to that effect.
14 I really don't want to go down that path again. I think that 15 speaks exactly to Walter's first point, is I don't have a whole
16 lot of guidance, nor do I have a whole lot of understanding why
17 we're even on this call today.

19 DR. DIAGNE: If I may, Mr. Chair, the reason why you guys are on 20 this call, as mentioned by Brad, was to give you an opportunity
21 to see the additional work that you requested at this meeting
22 and that is the purpose, as we said.

24 DR. GENTNER: Okay. Can we jump straight to motions then,
25 because this is pretty simple?

27 DR. DIAGNE: As we said in the document that we sent to you, in 28 the text, that is the purpose of this meeting. At any moment,
29 as a member of the SSC, you are free to offer a motion, of 30 course, and we will put it up for discussion with the other
31 members of the group.

32
33 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Does anyone have a motion or a question?

34
35 DR. HOLIMAN: I've got a question for Assane. Assane, do you
36 have a presentation for Agenda Item IV and V?

38 DR. DIAGNE: No. What from this end we would like is just to 39 make sure that the SSC has no outstanding issues that they would 40 like to discuss when it comes to looking at allocation.

42 We have the report from David and Juan and essentially it is our 43 job to take it and integrate it into the amendment and offer it
44 to the council, but if the group feels that there is any
45 outstanding issues that they would want us to look at, today I
46 guess would be the chance for them to bring it up and so
47 hopefully those items will be fairly short, I guess now that 48 we've asked the question.

2 If I may, Mr. Chair, maybe now is a good time to go to the
3 council members present and see if they have questions and they
4 can ask Juan and David before they leave.
6 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Do any council members have questions?
8 DR. DIAGNE: I see Mr. Doug Boyd and, Mr. Boyd, do you have a
9 question?
10
11 MR. DOUG BOYD: No, I am on the call, but I do not have any 12 questions.
14 DR. DIAGNE: Thank you, sir. I am just going down the list and 15 I see Dr. Crabtree on the list. Dr. Crabtree, do you have a 16 question for the panelists?
18 DR. ROY CRABTREE: No, I don't.
19
20 DR. DIAGNE: Thank you. Going down the list, I see Mr. Perret,
21 Corky Perret, and do you have a question for the panelists, sir?
22 Mr. Perret, we cannot hear you. Mr. Diaz, do you have a
23 question for the panelists, please? I will take that as a no
24 and who else do we have as a council member? Ms. Bosarge? I
25 think that will be the end of it, Mr. Chair. If some of the 26 members have motions to offer, I think it may be a good time.
27
28 DR. HOLIMAN: Mr. Chairman, I have another question. This
29 question is addressed to both Juan and David. Is there a limit
30 of reallocation beyond which you would not recommend the 31 application of your results?
32
33 I will clarify if necessary, but is there a limit beyond giving 34 us results for the alternatives as currently reviewed within the 35 amendment, is there a limit beyond which you recommend not 36 applying your model results, and if so, why?
37
38 DR. CARTER: Do you mean limit as in poundage, percentage, or 39 what do you mean?
40
41 DR. HOLIMAN: Percentage. I tend to think more in terms of 42 percentage, because that's the -- Yes, percentage.
44 DR. CARTER: We have been unable to pick an exact percentage.
45 The only thing we can say is that as you move further away from 46 the 1,2,3 percent, more or less, that your X becomes more and 47 more -- There is more uncertainty involved.
48

1 DR. GENTNER: We had considerable discussion on this issue at 2 the last meeting and actually, I believe we passed a motion that 3 addressed this particular fact or failed to pass a motion that
4 limited us in this regard and I just want to point out, or ask,
5 actually, from where I'm sitting, it looks like this new
6 information, these bounds, change nothing about the discussion
7 we had about that at the previous meeting.

9 There is more uncertainty the farther you move away from current 10 allocations, but there is nothing inherent in this analysis that 11 says you have to stick to a certain number of pounds or a 12 certain distance away from that.

14 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Okay. Does someone want to make a comment?

15
16 DR. ANDERSON: I am pretty comfortable with what we have here, 17 but I have to say that the paragraph that talks about National 18 Standard 5 and how much -- on this equal value, equal marginal
19 value argument.

21 I think we'll be -- I'm comfortable with if you want to have 22 your strict economic efficiency, the moves the council are 23 considering will likely increase net economic benefits, but the 24 issue is, and I think the council needs to look at it, is what 25 about the National Standard 5 one, what about the broader 26 definition of optimal yield?

28 Those are the things that have got to be considered. As far as 29 I view the thing, there is nothing in here -- This is the only 30 thing that really could be considered in making -- We have the 31 confidence that will increase it, but I don't think that 32 necessarily means that the council should approve it or 33 disapprove it and it's just we're missing something.

35 (There is an inaudible portion of the recording.)

37 DR. KEITHLY: Following up on what Dr. Anderson said, I would 38 agree that I'm relatively comfortable with this analysis and 39 certainly all it does is address changes of net economic 40 benefits.

42 Dr. Holiman mentioned at the last meeting though, when drafting
43 the amendment, that the National Marine Fisheries Service, Tony 44 Lamberte and other individuals drafting it, they will be 45 including other information of relevance in the amendment.
46 Again, the purpose of this meeting, and the previous one, was to 47 look at efficiency in the model.

1 I have now seen the confidence intervals, as I believe it was
2 Sherry Larkin wanted to see, and, like Brad, it has not changed
3 my mind at all. There seems to be very little overlap, even 4 when you look at the lowest values for the recreational versus
5 the highest values for the commercial, but I think we can make a
6 motion that the confidence intervals appear to be valid in the 7 way they were presented and derived and that's the main purpose
8 of what we were supposed to look at today.

10 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Assane, should we listen to the other
11 presentations first before we talk about motions?

13 DR. DIAGNE: If I may, Mr. Chair, could we ask the participants
14 to mute their mic themselves if they are not speaking, to reduce 15 the echo? Thank you. The quality of the call has decreased
16 significantly and so if you are not speaking, please mute
17 yourself and un-mute your mic before offering your comments, if 18 you would. Thank you.

20 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Thank you. Good suggestion. Assane, do you
21 think we should listen to other presentations before we move
22 into motions?

24 DR. DIAGNE: Yes. To that effect, I believe Dr. Holiman asked 25 the question and the second items are more questions to the 26 panel, if they have any outstanding issues that they would want
27 to bring to our attention as we move forward in this amendment.
28 That is all, but there are no presentations scheduled for the 29 additional items and so if you have motions or recommendations
30 to the council at any moment, please go ahead and offer those.

32 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Any additional questions or motions to offer?

33
34 DR. KEITHLY: I will make a motion and I was trying to write it
35 down as we were going through it, but since we've had the 36 confidence intervals that were requested at the previous meeting
37 and they were derived and appear to be correctly -- I can't read
38 my own handwriting here. Correctly constructed and used for the 39 current analysis. I will make that motion, just to put 40 something on the table for the time being.

42 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Would anyone wish to second that?

43
44 DR. GENTNER: Would we be comfortable adding "and don't change 45 the original conclusions of the analysis"?

47 DR. KEITHLY: I would take that as a friendly amendment, yes.

48

1 DR. GENTNER: I will gladly second that.
3 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: It's seconded by Brad. Is there discussion?
5 DR. DIAGNE: The motion has been put on the board and I hope
6 that everyone can see it. Is this the motion that was made and 7 seconded?
9 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Walter, do you agree with it?
10
11 DR. KEITHLY: Can I read it, did you say?
12
13 DR. DIAGNE: I just wanted to make sure that this is your motion
14 and that we captured accurately the motion that you made, as 15 well as the modification that Dr. Gentner suggested.
17 DR. KEITHLY: It looks fine to me, yes.
18
19 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: We have a motion and a second and 20 verification that it's worded correctly and is there any 21 discussion on this motion that is available on your computer
22 screen?
24 DR. ROBERTS: Walter, the original analysis, I wasn't there, but 25 I've read it several times and they didn't really make any 26 conclusions. I would say "the results of the analysis". I
27 would take "conclusions" out and simply say "results". I know
28 it's nitpicking a bit, but I don't think the original analysis
29 made a lot of conclusions.
30
31 DR. GENTNER: I would not second that change.
32
33 DR. KEITHLY: I think that "conclusions" is more accurate,
34 because the results have not changed. They gave the same
35 results. Dr. Carter and Dr. Agar gave the exact same results as 36 the previous meeting.
37
38 The reason for asking for the confidence intervals was to 39 examine whether there's some overlap, if we had very wide
40 confidence intervals for either the commercial or especially the 41 recreational results. Again, the confidence intervals show that 42 even the best case/worst case scenarios, whichever way you want
43 to put it, the conclusions of the analysis remain the same.
45 DR. ROBERTS: It's a matter of observation that I don't see
46 conclusions. I simply see results, but that's okay and let's 47 move on.
48

1 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Walter, are you willing to change the word
2 "conclusions" to "results"?
4 DR. KEITHLY: I would prefer to remain with "conclusions".
5 Again, the results have not changed at all. All that we were
6 given was some additional information to look to see if there
7 was any significant overlap between the values given to the 8 commercial and the recreational and so no, I would not be 9 comfortable.
10
11 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Understood. Any further discussion on the 12 motion on the table? Going once. Going twice. Okay. It would 13 appear that we are prepared to vote on the motion. What's the 14 best way to do a vote on the webinar here? Do we do a roll call 15 or --
16
17 DR. DIAGNE: Or ask if there is any opposition and start from 18 there, but either way.
20 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Is anyone opposed to the motion that's on the 21 table currently? Does anyone wish to abstain from the motion on 22 the table currently? I guess, by default, we conclude that the 23 support for the current motion is positive for all present on 24 the call. Does anyone disagree with that conclusion? The 25 motion is accepted as worded.
26
27 DR. DIAGNE: Mr. Chair, if I may, if the panel doesn't have 28 additional questions for Dr. Agar and Dr. Carter, we can let 29 them know and they can essentially go do something else. Are 30 there additional questions for the two presenters that we had,
31 David and Juan? If it is no, they may stay in the background
32 and listen, but they can also be working on other things at this 33 time. We take it as, David and Juan, you can listen in, of 34 course, but I don't hear additional questions going your way.
35 Thank you very much.
37 DR. CARTER: Thank you and let us know if you need us again. We 38 will be around.
39
40 DR. DIAGNE: All right. Thank you.
41
42 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Thank you. Is there a desire to suggest any 43 other motions?
45 DR. HOLIMAN: I have a motion that the SESSC requests the 46 opportunity to review Reef Fish Amendment 28 before the council
47 takes final action.
48

1 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Do we have a second for that motion?
3 DR. HOLIMAN: Just as a quick verification, I wanted to ask that
4 question to the SESSC and I figured in the form of a motion
5 would be the appropriate way.
7 DR. GENTNER: Can I get some clarification as to what that 8 means?
10 DR. HOLIMAN: The clarification, as I understand it, is to date
11 the SESSC has received the list of the actions and alternatives
12 and has twice been given the opportunity to review the economic 13 efficiency analysis prepared by the Science Center, but the 14 SESSC has not been given the opportunity to review the full
15 economic, social, biological, administrative, et cetera,
16 analysis that would be included in the amendment for review and 17 consideration by the council at the point during which they take 18 final action.
19
20 Just today, both Lee Anderson and Walter have spoken to the 21 point that there will be additional information and 22 considerations brought to bear in the decision of which action
23 to take and so that's what is behind this.
24
25 If the SESSC gets to review the entire amendment, they would 26 have that full analysis before them and be given an opportunity
27 to comment on the content of the economic and social analysis.
28
29 DR. GENTNER: Being new to this group, Steve, thank you for 30 that. That helps me a lot. Is that's something that is 31 typically done in this process? I think at the upcoming council
32 meeting -- I don't think we're voting on a particular amendment.
33 I think the agenda is whether or not we think this should -- The 34 council should forward this for scoping and so I just -- I'm not 35 really sure how that all fits together.
37 DR. HOLIMAN: Brad, we're beyond scoping at this point.
38
39 DR. GENTNER: We are beyond scoping?
40
41 DR. HOLIMAN: Again, my intent is not to have the committee make 42 recommendations on --, but to be given the opportunity to 43 comment on the accuracy, if you will, and the scope of the 44 associated economic and social analysis. This is rarely done,
45 but allocation is, like catch shares, perhaps a kind of special
46 situation.
47
48 DR. ANDERSON: I would second the motion.

2 DR. DIAGNE: Lee Anderson seconded the motion.
4 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Steve, would you want to add in there the
5 opportunity to review and comment on Reef Fish Amendment 28?
7 DR. HOLIMAN: I've got "review" in there and comment would be a
8 welcome friendly amendment. I kind of equate the two, but I
9 understand the addition. Understand this is just for 10 informational purposes and I would not expect the SESSC to 11 select a preferred or make a recommendation on the preferred,
12 but just talk about the scope, content, adequacy, et cetera,
13 given available information of the full analyses.
14
15 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Is there further discussion? Further
16 discussion going twice.
17
18 DR. GENTNER: I am still unclear as to procedure at this point
19 and how we interface with the council then.
20
21 DR. DIAGNE: If I may, Mr. Chair, as mentioned, we are now in 22 the amendment development process and where we are now is 23 essentially the council will review, in three weeks time, a 24 public hearing draft and discuss the alternatives and look at 25 the draft analysis in there and possibly suggest modifications
26 and possibly discuss preferred alternatives.
27
28 If this group wants an opportunity to look at the amendment,
29 that would be then with the benefit of suggested modifications
30 and additions from the council and so sometime during the 31 February and the April meeting.
32
33 That would be, it seems to me, the best time. Essentially while 34 we are going to public hearings, if that is the council's desire
35 also. If this group passes this motion, then a good time to 36 have this opportunity would be, let's say, for example, sometime
37 in early March.
38
39 DR. GENTNER: I guess is NMFS currently working on their 40 analysis of these options and they expect to have those done in 41 that timeframe?
42
43 DR. DIAGNE: Yes, I would say council staff and NMFS together, 44 at the IPT level. As you know, we have those working groups and 45 they are working together to put the amendment -- That will be 46 presented to the council very shortly, actually.
48 Your opportunity would become after the council meeting and you

1 would receive essentially everything that the council has seen
2 and possibly with the additions or modifications they would
3 suggest at that time.

5 If I may, Mr. Chair, I believe Dr. Larkin has a comment to make.
6 She has technical difficulty and though she cannot talk, she 7 sent a comment and I will have Ava read it into the record, if 8 possible.

10 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Assane, I have seen those comments, but I
11 believe they pertain to Motion 1 and not the motion on the table

14 DR. DIAGNE: I haven't looked at it and I was just informed and 15 so if we are past that point, then I guess it will -- If she has 16 additional comments, hopefully we will catch those in time.

18 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Yes and I was going to -- I presume she can 19 hear what we're saying and, Sherry, if you have any input on the 20 second motion, could you quickly email me or Assane about that 21 and we'll try to pause here for a moment or two and we'll try to 22 share your comments on the first motion after we get done with 23 this second motion.

25 In the meantime, while Sherry is possibly commenting on the 26 second motion by email, are there any further discussions on the 27 second motion? I don't see any quick response from Sherry
28 indicating that she wants to comment on the second motion and so
29 I will presume that we should go on and vote on the second 30 motion. Here comes something. She says she is good with the 31 second motion and then she talks about her previous comments,
32 which we'll get to that after we vote on this second motion.

33
34 It appears that she supports the second motion and so is there
35 anyone present who is opposed to the second motion? I heard no
36 comment and is there anyone that wishes to abstain regarding the 37 second motion? Therefore, I conclude that everyone present
38 supports and votes aye in favor of the second motion. If anyone
39 disagrees with that, please say so right now. Okay. The second 40 motion carries unanimously.

42 Would you like me to read the comments that Sherry emailed us?
43 By the way, she emailed all of us and so if any of you are able 44 to read your email while you're online here, you can read her
45 comments, but I know that first motion has already passed, but 46 given that Sherry was unable to communicate with us, I guess in 47 fairness we should at least listen to what she had to say.

1 She made two comments regarding the first motion that we passed.
2 First, the original motion was supplemented by other motions to 3 address the fact that the analysis was potentially outside of 4 what is a, quote, marginal, unquote, change. All motions should
5 be referred to and not just the first one.

7 I think she's saying that the motion that Walter made should
8 address all the previous motions from the minutes of the first
9 meeting and not just the first one, if I'm interpreting this 10 correctly.

12 DR. KEITHLY: I don't think so. I think what Sherry is 13 implying, and I'm trying to go back to the minutes and look as 14 we're talking, that basically there's -- I do vaguely recall 15 that there were two issues that were raised at the end of the 16 last meeting.

18 One of them dealt with the confidence intervals and that, to me,
19 was the main one, but it sounds like Sherry is saying that 20 there's also at least one other item and it may be this issue
21 regarding extrapolating the benefits outside the realm of the 22 data.

24 I think that's where she is coming from and I'm looking at the 25 minutes to see what the other issues were. As I recall, and I
26 looked at them this morning, but as I recall, the confidence
27 interval was the only main issue.

29 DR. HOLIMAN: My cheat sheet of the motions, other than the 30 request that they go and do the confidence intervals was we 31 passed a motion that basically said we accepted the methodology,
32 which I think everybody agrees with that.

34 The very last motion was something to the effect of encourage 35 the council to consider the limitations of the data utilized in 36 the analysis for the reallocation discussed. The ones in 37 between didn't have so much to do with their analysis itself.
38 There was one that says they want the council to look at the 39 first best incentive-based mechanisms, market and all that sort
40 of stuff.

42 They want to look at experimental methods to test the efficacy
43 of incentive-based institutions and then the next one had to do
44 with what we're going to get to and there's going to be more in 45 the -- The emphasis that the council needs to look at more than 46 economic efficiency, which, again, we've already established is 47 going to be the case.

1 My reading is it's really that first and that last motion that
2 really applies to the motion that we made today and so we signed
3 off on their analysis of the confidence intervals and it didn't
4 change the outcome or the conclusions, et cetera, and they've 5 already commented on the data limitations and so I don't see
6 anything more than that, personally.

8 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Maybe I should proceed with her second
9 comment here. I don't know if that will clarify anything.
10 Sherry just responded by email and she said: Right. The 11 analysis is marginal, quote, unquote, but the proposed options
12 in Amendment 28 involve changes in quota that are up to 10
13 percent, or very large, in my view.

15 Only the option that proposes a 1 percent change, for example,
16 would be valid. Using the analysis to extrapolate to 10 percent
17 and potentially larger changes is invalid, e.g., the last two.

19 DR. GENTNER: We spent considerable time talking about this in 20 person in Tampa and I couldn't disagree more. I think this 21 whole idea of what is marginal or non-marginal and the 22 applicability of these numbers all hinges on the shape of those 23 demand functions, the quota demand functions.

25 We concluded as a group, if I recollect correctly, that we were 26 fairly certain that those functions were likely stable enough
27 over the range of options that we were considering here that the 28 conclusions would be unlikely to be different.

30 That's not to say that these are non-marginal changes, but I
31 thought we had addressed this issue and I think that was the 32 biggest risk that many of us have sort of expressed on this call
33 today and in the meeting about having this call back in Tampa,
34 is why are we going to continue to kick some of these same cans
35 again and here we are continuing to kick some of these same cans
36 again.

38 DR. KEITHLY: I actually agree with Sherry. It's not a marginal
39 change, but I think all you can say is that yes, the uncertainty
40 regarding the conclusions will increase the larger any change
41 becomes.

42
43 We see this in cost benefit analysis all the time, that changes
44 that are proposed are not marginal. That's all we're looking at 45 here and I think all we can say is yes, any proposed change
46 becomes larger, the uncertainty surrounding those changes or the 47 economic benefits of those changes increase proportionately.

1 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: As a non-economist, I understand that that's 2 nothing really new.

4 DR. DIAGNE: Mr. Chair, I believe John Ward has his hand raised.
5 At least we can see that from our screen here and I don't know
6 if you can.

8 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Let me go ahead and read the second comment
9 that Dr. Larkin sent in her first message about fifteen minutes
10 ago, after we had already passed the first motion.

12 Her second comment, which is a little bit longer, two or three 13 sentences, is: It is not clear that this analysis solely 14 addresses the goals of the amendment. Specifically, I am
15 concerned that the different marginals might be interpreted as 16 being synonymous with increasing net benefits through 17 lengthening the recreational season. None of the analyses
18 presented addresses the link between more allocation and longer
19 seasons, which I do not think is a certainty, given the way
20 recreational fisheries are managed. As a result, accepting this 21 analysis is in no way an indicator that we believe net benefits
22 will increase from reallocation. That is the end of the 23 comment. Any reactions?

25 DR. HOLIMAN: I've got a reaction. I disagree. I think it's 26 easy to conclude that there will be an increase in net benefits
27 up to a point. The issue is at what point is it less certain?
28 That gets into is it 5 percent or 10 percent or any other 29 percent? Where does the -- Where did the assumptions in the 30 model or the content of the model become less certain or more
31 shaky, if you will?

32
33 I think the issue of whether more fish will directly translate
34 into more days or not, personally I think that's somewhat of a
35 moot question. Assuming the size of the fish does not increase,
36 what more pounds to the recreational sector equates to is more
37 trips that are able to limit out.

39 Now, it's a separate issue or discussion as to whether more
40 trips equate to more days or just more trips on the same number
41 or even a reduced number of days and so it's a more complex
42 issue and I don't disagree, but David gets into that in his 43 assumptions and what the implications of those assumptions
44 already are.

45
46 I appreciate the fact that yes, as the ACL has increased for the 47 recreational sector that the length of the season has shortened, 48 but that's an outcome of these other dynamics. If in fact we

1 were able to have a value per fish that was based on weight, we
2 might be able to have a different model, that a larger fish is
3 more valuable than a smaller fish, but if more pounds equals
4 more --

6 DR. GENTNER: I am not sure why we're still having this --

8 DR. HOLIMAN: I don't disagree, Brad, but I was just commenting 9 on Sherry's last comment.

11 DR. GENTNER: We sort of all agreed about these limitations and 12 we sort of all agreed that we are in sort of this second-best
13 situation and that first-best may be some sort of market
14 solution or something that takes into account behavior better.

16 Between those two would be just better modeling of this with a
17 bioeconomic model. A lot of Sherry's questions pertain exactly
18 to that. How would this interact with the stock and what would 19 be the outcome and that has impact on net benefits, but we also 20 agreed that the Gulf, in difference between net benefits here,
21 is unlikely to be changed by that sort of analysis.

23 What that sort of analysis gets us is the shape of these demand
24 functions and potentially what a bioeconomic model would get us
25 down the road is an optimum or something closer to an optimum, 26 but that's not the world we're in.

28 The world we're in is this is what we have. We've been asked to 29 make a decision and this is the best available science. We make 30 regulations and policies based on a whole lot worse information
31 regularly.

33 In fact, the season in the fisheries is open and closed with 34 data that has PSEs as high as 70 percent in some states and so 35 we also went round and round about that and why are we holding 36 up this study to such an incredibly high standard that we don't 37 hold for any of the other science that we do as a governing
38 body?

40 The percent standard errors on these valuation estimates are -- 41 I think it's 11 percent or so for the commercial and about 42 eight-and-a-half percent for the recreational estimates. Those 43 are pretty darned tight estimates and yet, we're still having 44 these discussions and so I don't know why we're doing this all
45 again.

47 I think that was a huge concern of mine and several others when 48 we talked about this is Tampa, is why are we going to dredge

1 this back up again. This terrible habit of doing this as a
2 group is we just keep kicking this can down the road when this
3 is good science and we agreed that it's good science and it's 4 the council's job to discuss the next things and vote on sort of 5 whether or not this is a good thing to do.

7 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Further comments? Sherry, I think I would
8 like you to email me whether it was your intention to support
9 Motion 1 or not. It sounds like maybe from your comments that 10 you were not in favor of it and since you couldn't speak on the 11 microphone, perhaps we need to record you as a nay vote. If 12 that's what you would wish, could you please email me and Assane
13 quickly here that you vote nay on Motion 1? If we do not hear 14 from you, then I guess we will leave it as is.

16 Any other discussion or any other motions? No further motions
17 to offer and no further discussion? The next item on the agenda
18 is Other Business. Does anyone have any other business?
19 Assane?

20 21 OTHER BUSINESS

22
23 DR. DIAGNE: No, Mr. Chair. This is the opportunity I guess
24 offered to the group to bring up any other issue or 25 recommendations they wish to forward to the council.

27 DR. ROBERTS: I just have a question. Has council staff or the 28 council made any comment on the other motions that were 29 presented to them as the result of the last committee meeting?

31 DR. DIAGNE: Yes, the council received the report. I'm sorry,
32 but the meeting was in November, right? No, I am sorry, Ken,
33 but I am having my dates mixed up. The council will have the 34 opportunity to look at all of that in February, because the 35 meeting was in November. For a second, I thought we meant prior 36 to the October meeting.

37
38 DR. ROBERTS: That answers my question.

39
40 DR. DIAGNE: In February, they will get everything and their 41 comments and suggestions and so forth will be, of course, shared
42 with the SESSC.

44 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Sherry has responded by email. She says: I
45 appreciate your willingness to allow me to comment. I do not
46 support the first motion, in particular the last clause, since I 47 don't think the conclusion that net benefits will increase are 48 true.

2 It appears that we have one vote against the first motion.
3 Thank you for your input, Sherry, and sorry you're not able to 4 join us more real time. Is there any further points anyone
5 wants to raise?

7 MS. LEANN BOSARGE: I wondered if as a group you could tell the 8 council or give the council your opinion, because I heard a 9 little bit of talk about this particular analysis is highly
10 accurate for marginal changes, which I'm assuming you mean 1
11 percent or less, and so could you give the council some sort of 12 feel at our next meeting how comfortable you are as a group
13 using this information for us to make a decision on the action
14 of changing this quota by more than 1 percent, specifically the 15 3 percent, 5 percent, or above options?

17 DR. GENTNER: We spent considerable, considerable time on this 18 issue at the original SESSC meeting that spawned this webinar
19 and I believe that issue is sorted.

20

21 MS. BOSARGE: I heard you say that and then I heard a few other 22 people that maybe still have some lingering doubts about it and 23 I understand it almost seems like there's two questions here.
24 Is the analysis accurate?

26 It seems like yes, everybody does think that this was the best
27 information that we had to go with and based on that, the 28 analysis is a good analysis, but my question is more of a
29 broader question of okay, yes, this may be the best information
30 that we have, but take a step back and say, okay, this analysis
31 overall, should we -- Since we didn't have the information that 32 we really think would have given us more confidence, should this 33 be used, especially with the extrapolation, to greater than 34 marginal changes for the council to look at it and say, oh, yes,
35 there would be quite a change in net benefits if we allocated 3
36 percent or 5 percent from one sector to another?

38 Do you all, as a group, feel good enough to say that, that yes,
39 we are going to -- Because it is a -- If you take this and apply
40 it to the real world, and I mean real lives that it's going to 41 affect, it is a big decision and we need to know that okay, this 42 data and this analysis is excellent when you're looking at 43 marginal changes, but when you extrapolate it to something
44 greater than that, do we still feel good enough to make a
45 decision on people's livelihoods, based on this information?

47 DR. GENTNER: I was speaking specifically to your point,
48 actually. We spent a lot of time discussing that exact issue

1 and I believe, after much discussion, we elected not to pass a
2 motion limiting the usefulness of this analysis to any hard
3 number, whether it be 100 percent or 1 percent or anything in 4 between, and that we felt that the analysis stood on its own and 5 that should just be a decision that moves forward with the 6 council.

8 Correct me if I'm wrong, but we spent a lot of time discussing
9 that exact point and the outcome was we refused to even offer a
10 motion or pass a motion that included any language of that 11 nature.

13 MS. BOSARGE: Did you decide not to offer that motion because 14 you didn't think that you would be able to pinpoint it to an 15 exact number and not because you thought that there might be an 16 issue there, but just because if you put that motion forth, how 17 would you decide what the number was?

19 DR. GENTNER: I think there's some disagreement in the SESSC
20 about that particular issue. I come down on the side of I think 21 this analysis is robust across a fairly wide range of non-22 marginal changes and I believe that is why we ended up where we 23 did in the original meeting.

24
25 It all has to do with whether or not you believe these quota
26 demand functions are stable across some range. The farther
27 away, as Walter said and Steve Holiman has concurred, the 28 farther away you get away from the current situation, the less 29 certain you can be about the difference between the two demand
30 functions for quota.

32 Right now, there is significant difference between the point
33 estimates or the willingness to pay for quota on the commercial
34 side and the recreational side and it would be hard to imagine
35 the shape of a quota demand function that would change the 36 results or change the recommendations of increasing net benefits
37 across what I think is a fairly wide range, certainly something
38 that would go outside of, quote, unquote, marginal change.

40 MS. BOSARGE: Okay and you're speaking over my head at that 41 point, when you get into your demand functions. That's not my 42 background at all, but I just wanted to make sure that that 43 motion was decided against because you did feel that comfortable
44 with the information and the data and the analysis as opposed to 45 if we put that motion forward, we really don't know how we could 46 have the number that we do feel comfortable with. That was my 47 concern.

1 As long as you can speak to the council and tell them that yes,
2 as a group that we all felt that this is valid, whether it's a 1
3 percent change or a 36 percent change, you feel good with it and 4 we think you should use this to affect people's livelihoods.

6 DR. ANDERSON: When I hear these questions and you keep going
7 back to the amounts, I still have to go back and say that 8 there's more to it than just looking at those numbers and the 9 ranges. There is issues of compensation, if that's what we're 10 looking at, and other issues of optimal yield.
11

12 You're figuring on this and if you get the answer and you say,
13 well, the number is whatever, that means there's a stamp of 14 approval for the council to make those choices and I think
15 there's a lot more to look at than just these numbers and I know
16 what Brad is saying, but we need to keep the broad horizon on 17 our focus.

19 DR. GENTNER: There is certainly a lot more to look at and I
20 agree with Lee and that was a significant part of the discussion
21 in the last meeting and I wish Lee could have been present for 22 that meeting, because we talked about that, but what we were 23 asked to do is evaluate this report and the conclusions of these 24 reports.

26 We even went beyond that and we even went beyond what I think 27 was appropriate and said what we should be looking at in our 28 other motions and in these things are some additional items and 29 some additional things, including downstream impacts to other 30 businesses and including what happens to the stocks and 31 including all of this other information, but we were asked to 32 judge this report.
33

34 We were asked to put it forward in terms of its advice for 35 allocation changes, with the caveat that we really should be 36 looking at the stock and we really should be using market-based 37 techniques, but we really should be living up to our mandate
38 that we need to look at allocation and change allocations every 39 five years in catch share fisheries.
40

41 I think the point was also made in the previous meeting, and 42 I've made it again today, is we make changes that impact
43 people's livelihoods that have far less certainty than what
44 we're dealing with here and also have far less extra information
45 or contributing factors than we would like to have, often, yet
46 we close fisheries and make catch quota decisions based on much
47 shakier data and much shakier analysis.
48

1 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Other than Sherry, is there anyone that
2 substantially disagrees with the summary of the last meeting
3 that Brad just made? Okay. I believe most of the people, other
4 than I'm pretty sure Sherry, would back up what Brad just said
5 as far as the discussion points at the last meeting, which I was 6 not able to be at either and I have to rely on others to 7 summarize it.

9 It appears -- I certainly agree with the points he made in the 10 latter part, about -- Having been a member of this panel for 11 more than twenty years, I don't know that we've ever had enough
12 information and data to make us feel 100 percent comfortable
13 with almost any decision or report we've written over that time
14 period.

16 We always have to work with what we have and use our backgrounds
17 and academic expertise and experience and take our best
18 estimate, using the best available scientific information. That 19 appears to be what happened at the previous meeting and today,
20 in the opinion of most of the present members.

22 DR. GENTNER: I think I want to point out too that the motions
23 reflect that. We agreed with the analysis on a split vote and 24 we then put forward a bunch of unanimous motions that back off
25 of that position, that put caveats around that, and told the 26 council what we prefer to see or what kinds of things we would 27 like to see in the future or where we should be working towards 28 in this fishery for future allocation decisions, but the fact of 29 the matter is, we're asked to make a decision on this that's up
30 before the council now.

32 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Thank you, Brad. Any further questions or 33 discussions or motions?

35 DR. ROBERTS: I hate to throw a monkey wrench in right now, but 36 I will try anyway. I read the minutes and I guess I disagree
37 with what Brad said at the end there. The first motion said
38 that the SESSC simply accepts the analytical methodology.

40 It stops short, I think, of the committee giving a ringing
41 endorsement to the results of that methodology. Like I say, I
42 wasn't there, obviously, but I just see a statement saying we 43 accepted the methodology and that doesn't mean you accept
44 everything that comes out of such methodology, does it, to you?

45
46 DR. GENTNER: Yes, it does.

47
48 DR. ROBERTS: It does, no matter what the data are, you accept

1 the results?

3 DR. GENTNER: Would you -- I would like to politely ask you to 4 read all of the motions.

6 DR. ROBERTS: The second one says: Encourage the council look
7 first at the incentive-based mechanisms. The second says: Move
8 to encourage the council to utilize experimental methods. The 9 third says: Council consider the suite of other socioeconomic
10 net benefits. Of course, those weren't in the methodology.

12 The last one is the SSC encourages the council to consider the 13 limitations of the data utilized. In other words, the data are 14 of question in the methodology and so --

16 DR. GENTNER: But they always are. They always are. We always 17 have a data issue. We will never have perfect data on anything
18 we are ever to decide upon and as a group of people who do this 19 for a living and are experts in this field, we pass motions with 20 caveats saying you need to pay attention to these things and 21 here are the limitations, just as we do with stock assessments
22 and just as we do with setting catch targets.

24 DR. ROBERTS: I don't have any doubt about that. I've been on 25 the council and I know all the experiments that go on with it,
26 but the point is that if in fact the data determines what
27 methodology you use, which is what the authors told me when I
28 asked my original question, then if you have a question of how 29 good the data are, you see where that leads.

30

31 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Any further input? We are about out of our 32 allotted time here. Any final comments or reactions?

34 MS. BOSARGE: I just wanted to say thank you for entertaining my 35 question.

37 DR. DIAGNE: If I may, Mr. Chair, as a group you passed a motion
38 requesting the opportunity to review the amendment and so
39 assuming that the council goes along with that request, we will 40 be sending a doodle poll sometime toward the end of the month of 41 February to schedule an SSC meeting, SESSC.

42

43 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: You are saying the doodle poll will go out at 44 the end of February and not that the meeting would be at the end
45 of February, correct?

47 DR. DIAGNE: Yes, sir. At the latest, by the end of February.
48 That's what I mean, for the doodle poll, yes, and you will tell

1 us when you want to meet. Certainly before the April council
2 meeting, well in advance of that.

4 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Is the April meeting scheduled for early
5 April or late April?

7 DR. DIAGNE: I believe it's the 7th to the 11th, if I'm not 8 mistaken, and so early April. Ideally, this meeting would be in 9 the middle of March at the latest, I believe, and earlier in 10 March would be great, but we will send a doodle poll after we go
11 to the council meeting and assuming, again, that they go along 12 with this request. As soon as we get that, we will start the 13 process. Thank you.

15 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Understood. I believe Leann was trying to 16 interject something and are you still there, Leann?

18 MS. BOSARGE: Yes and I just wanted to say thank you for 19 entertaining my question.

21 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Thank you for being involved and listening.
22 Do I hear a motion to adjourn?

23
24 DR. GENTNER: So moved. I move that we adjourn.

25
26 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Is there a second? All in favor? Anyone
27 opposed? Thank you for participating and the meeting is 28 adjourned.

29
30 DR. DIAGNE: Thank you so much and sorry for the technical 31 difficulties.

33 CHAIRMAN HOLLAND: Thank you for working them out, in most 34 cases. We may have to allocate some additional budget for 35 Sherry to get a microphone. See you all next time.

37 (Whereupon, the meeting adjourned on January 13, 2014.)

Public Hearing Draft for Amendment 28 to the Fishery Management Plan for the Reef Fish Resources of the Gulf of Mexico

Including Draft Environmental Impact Statement,
Fishery Impact Statement, Regulatory Impact Review, and Regulatory Flexibility Act Analysis

February 2014

Alternative 4 would allocate 59 % of the red snapper quota to the recreational sector and would be expected to correspond to a recreational fishing season ranging from 47 days to 53 days if all Gulf States adopt fishing regulations consistent with the federal regulations. Relative to Alternative 1, Alternative 4 would increase the recreational red snapper fishing season length by 8 to 9 days. Low and high season lengths accounting for inconsistent regulations adopted by Texas, Florida and Louisiana would be estimated at 44 days and 52 days, respectively.

Alternative 5 would continue to allocate 51% of the red snapper quota to the commercial sector and 49% of the red snapper quota to the recreational sector as long as the aggregate red snapper quota is below or equal to 9.12 mp, which was the total allowable catch in 2006. Once the threshold is reached, 75% of quota amounts in excess of 9.12 mp would be allocated to the recreational sector and 25% to the commercial sector. Based on an aggregate red snapper quota of 11.0 mp, Alternative 5 would allocate 5.121 mp and 5.390 mp to the commercial and recreational sectors, respectively. In percentage points, Alternative 5 would allocate 46.6% and 53.4% of the red snapper quota to the commercial and recreational sectors, respectively. Assuming that all Gulf States adopt regulations consistent with federal regulations, Alternative 5 the estimated recreational season length would range between 42 days and 48 days.

Like Alternative 5, Alternative 6 would maintain the 51/49 commercial/recreational split of the red snapper quota as long as the red snapper quota is less than or equal to 9.12 mp. However, if the red snapper quota is greater than 9.12 mp, Alternative 6 would allocate the totality of the amounts in excess of 9.12 mp to the recreational sector rather than 75% of the excess as done in Alternative 5. Based on an aggregate red snapper quota of 11.0 mp, Alternative 6 would therefore allocate 4.651 mp and 6.349 mp to the commercial and recreational sectors, respectively. In percentage points, Alternative 6 would allocate 42.3% and 57.7% of the red snapper quota to the commercial and recreational sectors, respectively. Assuming that all Gulf States adopt regulations consistent with federal regulations; Alternative 6 would be expected to result in a recreational red snapper season estimated to range between 46 days and 52 days.

As illustrated in Figure 2.1.2 percentages of the red snapper aggregate quota harvested by the commercial and recreational sectors i.e., the effective allocations, are different from their respective allotted shares determined by the allocation intended by the Council, i.e., the established allocation of 51% and 49% of the red snapper quota to the commercial and recreational sectors, respectively. Alongside allocation discussions and reallocation decisions, more consideration is warranted for management measures that would minimize the differences between the effective allocations and the allocation established by the Council.

Recent allocation studies completed by the SEFSC and reviewed by the Socioeconomic Scientific and Statistical Committee (SESSC) have concluded that existing allocations between the commercial and recreational sectors of several reef fish resources, including red snapper, are not economically efficient. In a 2012 study evaluating the economic efficiency of the allocation of red snapper resources, Carter and Agar<sup>4</sup> compared estimated commercial and recreational marginal willingness to pay for red snapper and indicated that the relative magnitude of the estimates suggests that economic efficiency could potentially be improved by reallocating red snapper resources. The SESSC reviewed and accepted the findings and conclusions of the study. The SESSC further stated that although the study results indicated that the marginal value of a recreationally caught red snapper is likely higher than the marginal value of a commercially caught red snapper, given the data used, e.g., data collection time periods (recreational data collected from a 2003 survey; commercial data collected during the last 5 years of the red snapper IFQ program), it cannot specify the potential efficiency gains from possible quota shifts because it does not know how the marginal valuations would change with the switch. A follow up study evaluating potential changes in net benefits expected to result from alternatives proposed in this amendment is provided in Appendix G.

Finally, this action cannot be implemented before the end of 2014. All alternatives propose a reduction from the current quota for the commercial sector. However, the commercial quota was distributed as IFQ allocation among shareholders' accounts at the beginning of 2014. Thus, the earliest a reallocation of quota could go into effect would be 2015.

1 Then criteria such as historic landings, the geographic
2 distribution, resulting in a subset of selected vessels that
3 were instrumented with both the old and the new ELB units and 4 that distinction is important, because they weren't selected
5 because they held a unit, but it was they were selected using
6 criteria and those criteria resulted in some of those vessels
7 containing both units. It's a nuance distinction.

9 CHAIRMAN BOYD: Can you give those changes to staff?

10
11 DR. PONWITH: I certainly can.

12
13 EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR GREGORY: I would like to take this 14 opportunity to encourage any of the council members that when 15 you get a copy of the committee report, it has been reviewed by 16 a couple of staff people and by the committee chair and probably 17 the vice chair, but if you see something that's amiss that needs
18 correcting before it comes to the council, feel free to contact 19 staff and just get it worked in.

21 CHAIRMAN BOYD: Any other issues this afternoon? Then we're 22 going to recess until in the morning at 8:30, at which time Dr.
23 Shipp will take up the Reef Fish Committee. Thank you.

31

33
34 - - -

35
36 The Full Council of the Gulf of Mexico Fishery Management
37 Council reconvened at the Westin Galleria, Houston, Houston, 38 Texas, Thursday morning, February 6, 2014, and was called to 39 order at 8:30 a.m. by Chairman Doug Boyd.

41 CHAIRMAN BOYD: It is 8:30 and we are back in session. We have 42 the Reef Fish Committee this morning and, Dr. Shipp, are you
43 ready?

45 REEF FISH MANAGEMENT COMMITTEE REPORT

46
47 DR. SHIPP: I am, sir. This is the Reef Fish Committee Report
48 and we have streamlined these committee reports and taken out a

1 lot of the verbiage.

3 CHAIRMAN BOYD: Dr. Shipp, just one thing. Staff reminded me or 4 told me that we have changed the password to get into the 5 internet and it's on the board. It's a changed password and so
6 I'm sorry to interrupt, but they wanted me to let everybody know
7 that.

9 DR. SHIPP: No problem. We met and all members were present.
10 The agenda was adopted, with a change in the order of some items
11 and the addition of a presentation under Other Business on the 12 Alabama underwater cypress tree habitat. There were no exempted 13 fishing permit applications to discuss. The minutes of the 14 October 29, 2013 Reef Fish Committee meeting were approved as 15 written.

17 Report of the Ad Hoc Red Snapper IFQ AP, Tab B, Number 8, Bob
18 Gill summarized the AP report and highlighted changes to the IFQ
19 program recommended by the advisory panel. Mara Levy noted that 20 prior to developing a plan amendment considering modifications
21 to the red snapper IFQ program, the council must submit a list
22 detailing proposed changes to NOAA to determine whether 23 referenda are required. Committee members will discuss changes
24 to the red snapper IFQ program during the April council meeting.

26 Update on Current MRIP Estimates, Luiz Barbieri summarized an 27 SSC review of the status of MRIP issues with respect to red
28 snapper. The new MRIP methodology appears to provide estimates
29 that are more accurate and less biased.

31 However, due to discrepancies between the 2013 MRIP estimates
32 and earlier years, efforts are underway to evaluate the 33 potential effects of the new sampling design on landings
34 estimates using empirical and simulation approaches. In summer
35 2014, an MRIP calibration workshop is expected to provide more
36 specific guidance on how to proceed. The SSC will review
37 results after these analyses are completed.

39 Amendment 28, Red Snapper Allocation, Tab B, Numbers 4 to 7,
40 David Carter of the Southeast Fisheries Science Center
41 summarized the study evaluating the economic effects expected
42 from the red snapper reallocation alternatives in Amendment 28.

44 He discussed the methods, data, limitations, and results of the 45 study and noted the Socioeconomic SSC reviewed the study twice
46 and approved the methodology used. He indicated that for all
47 alternatives analyzed, benefits to the recreational sector are 48 greater than the costs to the commercial sector. The figure

1 below summarizes the results discussed. In the report, we have
2 a bar graph showing the benefits from all the alternatives in 3 the document.

5 Mike Jepson of NMFS presented the recommendations of the SESSC
6 relative to the allocation study conducted by the Science
7 Center. Dr. Jepson indicated that the SESSC requested to review
8 Amendment 28 before the council takes final action.

10 Emily summarized the public comments. Assane presented the 11 management alternatives included in Amendment 28. He indicated
12 that the amendment includes alternatives that would reallocate
13 fixed percentages of the quota and alternatives that would 14 reallocate quota amounts in excess of 9.12 million pounds.

16 The committee discussed the inclusion of additional actions and 17 offered the following motion. The motion is to instruct staff
18 to add additional actions and alternatives that address slot
19 limits, fish tags, and one fish versus two fish. The motion
20 failed.

22 The committee made the following motion. By a vote of six to
23 four, the committee recommends, and I so move, that in Action 1, 24 the preferred alternative be Alternative 5. Alternative 5 is if 25 the red snapper quota is less than or equal to 9.12 million
26 pounds, maintain the commercial and recreational red snapper
27 allocations at 51 percent and 49 percent of the red snapper
28 quota, respectively. If the red snapper quota is greater than 29 9.12 million pounds, allocate 75 percent of the amount in excess
30 of 9.12 million pounds to the recreational sector and 25 percent
31 to the commercial sector. Based on a red snapper quota of 32 eleven-million pounds, resulting allocations to the commercial
33 and recreational sectors are 5.121 million pounds and 5.879
34 million pounds, respectively.

35
36 CHAIRMAN BOYD: We have a committee motion and it needs no
37 second. Is there discussion?

38
39 MR. PEARCE: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a substitute
40 motion, please. That substitute motion is that the preferred
41 alternative be Alternative 1, no action.

43 CHAIRMAN BOYD: We have a substitute motion and do we have a 44 second?

45
46 MR. SANCHEZ: Second.

47
48 CHAIRMAN BOYD: We have a second by Mr. Sanchez and is there

1 probably 2016 before we could do them.

3 The only other thing I wanted to mention that I consider
4 whenever I say I'm struggling with this is Myron mentioned, and
5 I appreciate him doing that, that we're trying to look at net
6 benefits and consider that, but when you consider the recent
7 history of what's been going on, if you look at our own
8 documents in the amendment, in Table 2.1.1 on page 8, it gives a
9 five-year breakdown from 1986 to 2012 of what has happened if 10 you look through that time series.

12 From 2006 to 2012, the way this thing has been going with 13 landings is the commercial have landed about 45.28 and the 14 recreational, during that five-year period, landed 54.72 and so
15 there has been a shift and the recreational have been landing
16 over their allocation, by the reasons I mentioned earlier.

18 The most recent number that we have confirmed is the year 2012
19 and for the year 2012, the percentage that was actually landed
20 was 43.96, almost 44 percent, and then on the recreational side, 21 it was a little over 56 percent, 56.04.

23 We've got some issues we've got to correct and we have to start
24 moving towards correcting those issues and so I just wanted to 25 point out the things that's been going through my mind and I'm 26 sure we've all been deliberating with the issues related to this 27 and I just want to make sure that -- After we hear from the 28 public, maybe some of this stuff will be cleared up and it will 29 be easier for us to cast our votes on the final actions,
30 whenever they occur. Thank you.

31
32 MS. BOSARGE: I am new to the council and so maybe I look at 33 things a little differently because I'm not quite as engrained
34 yet and so I'm not going to speak directly to the percentages
35 and this and that, but I just kind of want to take more of a
36 forest approach to looking at this and I hope that you all will 37 listen to me for just a second.

39 I think we're very lucky to have the power that we have on this 40 council and we forget that and our job as a council is to manage 41 these individual fisheries, whether it's snapper, whether it's 42 grouper or whatever it is.

44 In order to manage a fishery, managing a fishery is a long-term
45 approach to something. It's not a short-term approach and at 46 this meeting and all the meetings, I feel like somewhere we lost
47 track of that and everything that we are looking at to fix the 48 problem, to fix the problem, are all these short-term

1 approaches. This is a short-term fix and it's just like what
2 Corky said.

4 This is going to give them two to eight days to provide a short-
5 term fix for a sector that we don't have enough fish for. We 6 don't have enough fish for them and shame on us for not
7 realizing that we have the answer to the problem already. It's 8 not an easy answer. It's a tough answer. It requires us to 9 step up to the plate and make decisions that are not popular,
10 but we have the blueprint right in front of us.

12 As a population of fish, if you put constraints on it and allow 13 enough to go back, it will blossom. That's a long-term
14 approach. We did it on one side and we have the proof that it
15 works. We constrained one sector and it doesn't matter what 16 sector it is. It doesn't matter if it's commercial or 17 recreational. Don't think about it that way.

19 We put a constraint on a sector and look what we've done. It's 20 come back and it's blossomed and everybody has gotten to benefit
21 from it and that's great. I am not going to say, oh, no, only
22 that sector should have benefited.

24 It's not about sectors. It's about doing what we have to do to 25 provide for the long-term benefit of both sectors. If we can 26 put a constraint on whatever portion, whatever sector, whoever 27 it is, if we can put a constraint on that other population of 28 fish that is not constrained, then we have a long-term solution
29 for the sector that doesn't have enough fish.

31 Robbing from Peter to pay Paul is a short-term answer. It's 32 what they do in Washington and I hope it's not what we're going 33 to do here. We have got to take a long-term approach to it and 34 we have proof that that will work and why are we not doing it?
35 Why are we sitting here debating 25 percent or 75 percent or 1
36 percent or 3 percent? What are we doing? That's my question.

38 MR. WILLIAMS: I am going to play off what my colleague Myron
39 Fischer said and talk about net benefits. I am persuaded,
40 looking at the data, that there are net benefits from moving 41 some of the allocation from the commercial sector to the 42 recreational sector.

44 In looking through the Agar and Wagner study, they've got a lot
45 of provisos in there. The data aren't ideal and I guess they 46 never are ideal in this business, but they urge that we be 47 cautious with using these data.

1 I think a lot of scientists are often stuck in the position
2 where they have to offer an opinion. They are working for 3 somebody that needs an opinion and so they simply have to take
4 the data that they have available and give you an opinion on it
5 and I think that's what they've done here.

7 I am not going to be a climate science denier and I am not going 8 to try to refute this analysis that they've done because I just 9 don't want to believe it. I am willing to accept it. Our SSC
10 has accepted it. Our Socioeconomic Panel has accepted it and so
11 I'm not going to substitute my judgment for theirs.

13 On the other hand, there are some things within it that I have 14 to evaluate myself and try to figure out if I really believe.
15 When Dr. Wagner gave his presentation the other day, he showed 16 us a graph of how they value the commercial fish at about $3.00
17 per pound.

19 That's apparently what one fisherman will pay to buy it from 20 another and in the recreational fishery, they have it valued at 21 $10.00 a pound and that's the part that I have trouble
22 believing.

24 I am sure there is people that will pay $10.00 a pound to just 25 go catch a fish recreationally, but do I believe on the average,
26 that the average fisherman would be willing to go pay an extra
27 $10.00 a pound, fifty bucks, to catch a five-pound red snapper?
28 I don't. I don't believe that.

29
30 It's a matter, to me, of degree. I am persuaded that there
31 would be some benefit shifting from commercial to recreational
32 and I want to do the right thing for the United States and so I
33 am prepared to make that vote. How much I'm prepared to move, I
34 am still uncertain about and these marginal analyses, I think --
35 In talking to other economists, they tell me you've got to keep 36 allocations relatively small, because the data are not good for 37 large moves. They are looking at small increments of change and 38 we need to keep our increments of change relatively small, too.
39 I am prepared to make a change, but I am not prepared to make a
40 big change. Thank you.

42 DR. CRABTREE: I think as you go through this discussion -- I
43 wouldn't get as focused on how many days this gets you. The 44 real issue here is, is the allocation appropriate?

45
46 Whether it gets you three more days or twenty more days doesn't
47 fundamentally change the question of is the allocation
48 appropriate. It's been a long time since this allocation was in

1 place and so I think a review of that is timely.

3 Now, the net benefits that we talked about is one part of that,
4 but I would encourage you to remember that there are other
5 things you have to look at and in particular, I think the part
6 of the statute which requires that we allocate both overfishing
7 restrictions and recovery benefits fairly and equitably among 8 sectors of the fishery is important.

10 I think as you go through this discussion, it's important that 11 you keep that in mind. Are the restrictions and the benefits
12 being fairly and equitably shared? Are both sectors benefitting
13 from the recovery to the same extent? I think that needs to be 14 a big part of your discussion and not so much about the number
15 of days it gets you, because I think it's the allocation that 16 you're here talking about and not just days.

18 MS. LEVY: I agree with Roy and would reiterate that, as well as 19 also looking at the idea of what allocation is appropriate to 20 reasonably calculate it to promote conservation and so there's 21 other things other than the net benefits. The net benefits is a
22 piece of it and an important part, but there are other aspects
23 to the allocation that should be considered in determining 24 whether reallocation is appropriate and by how much.

26 MR. MATENS: Two things. As I sit here and listen to this, Roy, 27 I agree that the only issue on the table here is the issue of 28 reallocation. The issue of days, that's really not important.
29 I do have a point of order. It's my intent that these votes be 30 roll call votes and do I have to do this at every motion?

31

32 DR. CRABTREE: I believe you need to request a roll call vote at 33 each vote.

35 MR. MATENS: Fine and thank you. Hence, I request a roll call
36 vote on this motion. Thank you.

37

38 MR. PERRET: Obviously Dr. Crabtree and Mara are getting a
39 little nervous, because the only rationale I have heard, and it
40 started with Mr. Fischer, is net economic benefits. Dr. Shipp
41 concurred with that and Mr. Williams mentioned net economic 42 benefits. I have heard nothing else, no other rationale,
43 nothing to do with conservation, nothing to do with stability,
44 nothing to do with any other things that we're responsible for 45 in making these decisions.

47 I will remind the council again that we have a National Standard
48 to prohibit measures that have economic allocation as its sole

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

- "Amendment 28" would hurt small businesses and families along the Gulf coast by cutting nearly half a million pounds of popular red snapper from the consumer market in 2015– and even more in the future. Currently, commercial and recreational fishermen share the red snapper catch roughly 50-50 and there is no good reason to change that. Commercial and recreational fishing in the Gulf are both important economic drivers and we do not have to choose one at the expense of another.

- Amendment 28 is a false promise to recreational fishermen who will not experience long-term stability or longer seasons as a result of this change. Even the American Sportfishing Association, a group that supports the amendment, admits that reallocation, "will not result in a significant increase in allowable days to fish" for recreational fishermen. Better solutions for recreational fishermen exist, but policymakers have refused to try them.

- This "reallocation" proposal is divisive, unfair and comes at a time when demand for local and sustainable seafood is at an all-time high. The National Restaurant Association lists locally sourced seafood as the #1 menu trend for the past four years in a row.

- Please oppose Amendment 28 and focus on real solutions for recreational fishermen that will actually extend seasons for anglers over the long-term instead of schemes that hurt the seafood industry and consumers. Hundreds of chefs, restaurant owners, seafood companies, trade associations, conservationists, fishermen and seafood lovers from all across the Gulf have already united in opposition to reallocation and decision makers should, too.

Subject: Changes in commercial /recreational red snapper shares

Message: As a commercial fisherman with only 2477 lbs/ IFQ shares the change taking away red snapper shares and giving to rec. fishermen will hurt small fishermen especially in Mississippi , there are only two IFQ landing sites and to land here I had to lease property(with a 10) year lease which was just renewed.when I initially purchased my reef permit and red snapper class 2 permit I was not allowed to view the previous owners fish history and because it was not fished that often I received only a small amt of red snapper and no grouper or tile fish. Red snapper here on the Mississippi sells for $3.00 - $3.50 per pound.the lease price for red snapper allocation is $3.50 per pound and the share price is $35.00.00 per pound/share. Which puts it out of reach for small fishermen. It seems to me the small fishermen are being put out of business . How are we going to stay in business if shares are given to the recreational fishermen, I get the feeling that we are really being put out of business . IT is to the point that if the gulf council or nmfs will buy every thing I will sell a buy back is something I would do because with the prices as they are it is almost impossible to make a living as it stands. When I started up there was only one NMFS landing zone in Mississippi and the owner of Clark's seafood would not allow us to land fish there so we had to lease land and got it listed as a NMFS landing zone if I go out of business we will close down the site as well I am to the point of saying BUY back my permits and boat and VMS and I will get out of business and I can close down my IFQ landing zone as well that will leave only one landing zone and the price of snapper I will go up which will cause the restaurants to pass on the price to the consumers. IF there was a way to increase our red snapper shares and grouper shares we could stay in business . AT THIS POINT WE NEED HELP HERE IN MISSISSIPPI PLEASE LET US KNOW WHAT IS AVAILABLE SO WE CAN STAY IN BUSINESS. Any help or ideas will be greatly appreciated. William m. Lee Jr. Gautier Mississippi. The new amendment to reallocate snapper from commercial sector to the recreational sector is a joke. The amount to be reallocated is just far to small. The percentage should be 75% of the tac going to the recreational sector and only 25% of the tac going to the commercial sector. The revenue developed by the recreational sector (tackle,gas,ice,boats,hotels,restaurants,licenses,and many more things)far out weight anything the commercial sector could ever dream of.

Amendment 28

I am in favor of reducing commercial allocation for all fish species. In particular, for red snapper. Recreational fishermen numbers far out weigh the number of commercial fishermen. Thus, the quota for recreational fishermen should be well above 50%, I would say 80-20 would be fair. 80% for recreational, and 20% for commercial. I believe it is currently 51% commercial and 49% recreational. This is wrong.

Why do commercial fishermen get to make money off of a national resource?

Also - why do commercial red snapper only have to be 14 inches? Do those fish somehow reproduce earlier than the ones we catch at 16 inches? I believe the 16 inch limit for recreational is based on reproduction rates, correct? Why the difference?

Doug Boyd, Chairman
Gulf of Mexico Fishery Management Council
2203 N Lois Avenue, Suite 1100
Tampa, FL 33607

Dear Mr. Boyd,

Louisiana's restaurant, hospitality and tourism industry play a significant role in our state's economic recovery. The National Restaurant Association predicts that total Louisiana revenue for 2014 will exceed $7.0 billion for the first time. Our industry is also the largest employer in the state.

One of the pillars of our industry is the focus on sustainability and social responsibility. We want to be good stewards of the resources that are utilized to supply and support our member's businesses.

For the past few years, we have closely followed the activities of the Gulf of Mexico Fishery Management Council and its oversight of the fishing interests in the Gulf. In 2013, the Gulf Council has considered a proposal deemed "Amendment 28" that would seek to modify how the current total red snapper catch is allocated between commercial and recreational fisherman. One of the current alternatives proposes that any increase in total catch allocation be given to the recreational sector instead of following the current 51% commercial and 49% recreational allocations that have been followed to date. Included in the recreational allocation are individual fishermen, charter captains and fishing guides. Our industry recognizes the importance of the recreational sector including those visitors who dine in our restaurants, stay in our hotels, and visit our attractions when they come to Louisiana for a charter fishing trip.

The Louisiana Restaurant Association has opposed Amendment 28. Instead we recommend the Gulf Council consider other possibilities that provide better access for recreational fishing. We oppose changing an allocation that has worked. We lead a coalition of restaurants, chefs, suppliers and fishermen in urging the Gulf Council to reject this proposed amendment.

The commercial fishermen are the lifeline for our restaurants, seafood dealers and retail stores. In Louisiana it is not simply the methods that we use to prepare seafood and fish that differentiates our restaurants from the rest of the country. It is also the unique Gulf fish species that we prepare. Access to red snapper and other Gulf seafood is critical to sustaining our industry.

The fish in the Gulf of Mexico belong to every citizen of the United States. We agree that current recreational management requires review including considering changes as to how the fishing seasons are established. Recreational fishermen are left with a smaller target window to fish, which increases their frustration with the outdated regulations. Unfortunately, this proposed amendment offers little to resolve the shortened fishing seasons.

Through good fishery management practices, the Gulf red snapper population is healthy and recovering. It makes little sense to us to work against the progress that has been made to date by modifying an allocation that will do little to increase the access by recreational fisherman. We are asking the Gulf Council to continue to review best practices in fishery management for the Gulf of Mexico. Our industry needs access through our commercial fishermen to continue to offer the seafood products that draw visitors from around the world who visit Louisiana to enjoy our restaurants.

We ask the Gulf Council to reject Amendment 28 and work with commercial and recreational interests to insure reasonable access and practices for all.

We ask that you please make this available to all members of the Gulf of Mexico Fishery Management Council.

Sincerely,

Stan Harris
President and Chief Executive Officer

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

Amendment 28 is a travesty! Common sense dictates that the Gulf Coast commercial fishermen feed the nation while recreational fishermen feed only their families in a five state area. This 'reallocation' proposal is divisive, unfair and comes at a time when demand for local and sustainable seafood is at an all-time high.

I am shocked at the collective intellectual capital of the Gulf Council coming up with such a ridiculous recommendation and believe that the lobbyists for the recreational fishermen must be making worthwhile for the Council members to vote with them, another travesty! These individuals are appointed to represent their various factions of the fishery industry, yet seem always to favor the recreational side of the fishery.

Amendment 28, if passed, will not help the recreational fishery achieve a goal of longer fishing seasons and additional catch. The recreational sector has traditionally over caught their quota every year and Amendment 28 will not change this, thereby guaranteeing reduced seasons in perpetuity unless a true and accurate mechanism of reporting the recreational catch can be devised.

The commercial sector of the fishery has been required to maintain their catches within the limits set for them and is even forced to pay a percentage of their hard-earned proceeds to the federal government for enforcement of their portion of the industry. Will the recreational sector be asked to do so also via a higher costing license?

The passing of Amendment 28 will also see reduced prices paid to the commercial fishermen as some of these additional fish granted to the recreational sector will definitely end up in the commercial market. There will be backdoor sales of fish to unscrupulous small fish markets and restaurant owners. Due to a lack of land-based enforcement, it happens now and can only get worse with the passing of Amendment 28. The wholesale price of fish catches has definitely not kept up with the cost of fuel, bait, provisions, ice or vessel maintenance. It has barely risen over the past 20 years, compared to all of the expenses it takes to operate a fishing service.

Please put pressure on the Gulf Management Council to oppose Amendment 28! This is not an Amendment we need in the Red Snapper fishery!

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

- "Amendment 28" would hurt small businesses and families along the Gulf coast by cutting nearly half a million pounds of popular red snapper from the consumer market in 2015– and even more in the future. Currently, commercial and recreational fishermen share the red snapper catch roughly 50-50 and there is no good reason to change that. Commercial and recreational fishing in the Gulf are both important economic drivers and we do not have to choose one at the expense of another.

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

Please oppose the reallocation of red snapper in the Gulf of Mexico. As a seafood consumer I want to have continued access to fresh Florida seafood. I feel reallocating more red snapper to the recreational fisherman would seriously limit restaurants and consumers the fresh caught fish we have a right to. Please consider doing the right thing and protect our access. Thank you.

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

It is well know that this type of re-allocation will not really increase the recreational peoples fishing days.

The reason for this is that the recreational sector has NO WAY to be accurately monitored. UNTIL rec fisherman are REQUIRED to have monitoring devices and true accountability applied they will be under "tables & formulas"....and they should be.

The council should continue in the manner that has worked perfectly since the inception of the IFQ program, whose net affect is that at least 50% (the commercial sector) is under heavyscrutiny/accountaqbility=at least half of the red-snapper fishery is being properly managed.

We believe the heavy monitoring and accountability of the commercial fishery is the only reason the red-snapper are returning at all.....Thus the 50/50 split should be maintained....Thank You

Commercial and recreational fishing in the Gulf are both important economic drivers and we do not have to choose one at the expense of another.

Better solutions for recreational fishermen exist, but policymakers have refused to try them.

This "reallocation" proposal is divisive, unfair and comes at a time when demand for local and sustainable seafood is at an all-time high.

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

"Amendment 28" would hurt small businesses and families along the Gulf coast by cutting nearly half a million pounds of popular red snapper from the consumer market in 2015– and even more in the future. Currently, commercial and recreational fishermen share the red snapper catch roughly 50-50 and there is no good reason to change that. Commercial and recreational fishing in the Gulf are both important economic drivers and we do not have to choose one at the expense of another.

Amendment 28 is a false promise to recreational fishermen who will not experience long-term stability or longer seasons as a result of this change. Even the American Sportfishing Association, a group that supports the amendment, admits that reallocation, "will not result in a significant increase in allowable days to fish" for recreational fishermen. Better solutions for recreational fishermen exist, but policymakers have refused to try them.

This "reallocation" proposal is divisive, unfair and comes at a time when demand for local and sustainable seafood is at an all-time high. The National Restaurant Association lists locally sourced seafood as the #1 menu trend for the past four years in a row.

Please oppose Amendment 28 and focus on real solutions for recreational fishermen that will actually extend seasons for anglers over the long-term instead of schemes that hurt the seafood industry and consumers. Hundreds of chefs, restaurant owners, seafood companies, trade associations, conservationists, fishermen and seafood lovers from all across the Gulf have already united in opposition to reallocation and decision makers should, too.

Subject: Oppose the Red Snapper Reallocation Scheme (Amendment 28)

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

Amendment 28 does not really seem to be necessary since the current arrangement of 50-50 for each, recreational and commercial fishing, is fair and seems to be working. This re-allocation scheme does not guarantee either side more fish. I don't think changing the times of access to red snapper is really the answer.

Furthermore, so many businesses in all states with gulf access depend on the snapper as a mainstay of their menus, so much so, that the economy will be greatly affected when more people will be disappointed when it is not on the menu.

Please stop Amendment 28 and look for a better solution that will not hurt the economy or limit time of access. Perhaps a solution lies in "location" or "allotment" rather than time.

Sincerely,

•Amendment 28 is a false promise to recreational fishermen who will not experience long-term stability or longer seasons as a result of this change. Even the American Sportfishing Association, a group that supports the amendment, admits that reallocation, "will not result in a significant increase in allowable days to fish" for recreational fishermen. Better solutions for recreational fishermen exist, but policymakers have refused to try them.

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members,

"Amendment 28" would hurt small businesses and families along the Gulf coast by cutting nearly half a million pounds of popular red snapper from the consumer market in 2015– and even more in the future. Currently, commercial and recreational fishermen share the red snapper catch roughly 50-50 and there is no good reason to change that. Commercial and recreational fishing in the Gulf are both important economic drivers and we do not have to choose one at the expense of another.

Please oppose any reallocation scheme for red snapper and to refocus their efforts on new management options for recreational fishermen that will actually improve fishing opportunities for Gulf fishermen.

Although fishing for pleasure is wonderful and some people actually can help to feed their families this way. business is so important to many people's families in order to survive, that I feel we should not impair their livelihood and instead in this still tough economy do not have as much concern over the fishing for pleasure. However, I realize that there are some businesses that have income from those wanting to fish for pleasure, so this needs to be balanced somehow.

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

Amendment 28 would hurt small businesses and families along the Gulf coast by cutting nearly half a million pounds of popular red snapper from the consumer market in 2015– and even more in the future. Currently, commercial and recreational fishermen share the red snapper catch roughly 50-50 and there is no good reason to change that. Commercial and recreational fishing in the Gulf are both important economic drivers and we do not have to choose one at the expense of another.

Amendment 28 is a false promise to recreational fishermen who will not experience long-term stability or longer seasons as a result of this change. Even the American Sport fishing Association, a group that supports the amendment, admits that reallocation, "will not result in a significant increase in allowable days to fish" for recreational fishermen. Better solutions for recreational fishermen exist, but policymakers have refused to try them.

This "reallocation" proposal is divisive, unfair and comes at a time when demand for local and sustainable seafood is at an all-time high. The National Restaurant Association lists locally sourced seafood as the #1 menu trend for the past four years in a row.

Please oppose Amendment 28 and focus on real solutions for recreational fishermen that will actually extend seasons for anglers over the long-term instead of schemes that hurt the seafood industry and consumers. Hundreds of chefs, restaurant owners, seafood companies, trade associations, conservationists, fishermen and seafood lovers from all across the Gulf have already united in opposition to reallocation and decision makers should, too.

While I understand that recreational fishing is important, I believe that the commercial fishermen are vital to the economy of Florida and the whole coast of the Gulf of Mexico. Furthermore, the problem of fewer fish is not caused by the commercial fishing any more than it is caused by recreational fishing.

The problem needs to be studied scientifically and solved. Cutting the pie differently does not increase the size of the pie, which is the problem.

Amendment 28" would hurt small businesses and families along the Gulf coast by cutting nearly half a million pounds of popular red snapper from the consumer market in 2015– and even more in the future. Currently, commercial and recreational fishermen share the red snapper catch roughly 50-50 and there is no good reason to change that. Commercial and recreational fishing in the Gulf are both important economic drivers and we do not have to choose one at the expense of another.

Amendment 28 is a false promise to recreational fishermen who will not experience long-term stability or longer seasons as a result of this change. Even the American Sportfishing Association, a group that supports the amendment, admits that reallocation, "will not result in a significant increase in allowable days to fish" for recreational fishermen. Better solutions for recreational fishermen exist, but policymakers have refused to try them.

This "reallocation" proposal is divisive, unfair and comes at a time when demand for local and sustainable seafood is at an all-time high. The National Restaurant Association lists locally sourced seafood as the #1 menu trend for the past four years in a row.

Please oppose Amendment 28 and focus on real solutions for recreational fishermen that will actually extend seasons for anglers over the long-term instead of schemes that hurt the seafood industry and consumers. I am opposed to the provisions of amendment 28 on the Gulf Fishery, the recreational fishery already is allocated 69% of the Gag grouper quota; is allowed to fish year around for Red grouper, which is the bread and butter of the commercial fishery and it is allocated 49% of the Red snapper, with no accountability measures assigned their allowable catch, while the commercial fishery bears the burden of strict accountability measures. Recreational fishermen regularly exceed established quotas with nothing but a token estimate from authorities.

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

Commercial and recreational fishing in the Gulf are both important to our heritage and our economy; we should not have to choose one at the expense of the other. Each contributes billions of dollars to the economy and sustains tens of thousands of jobs. But now there is a proposal that would force us to make this false choice and that's wrong Amendment 28" would hurt our region's seafood industry by taking one of the most popular Gulf fish, red snapper, and giving more of it to a poorly-managed recreational sector at the expense of commercial fishermen, restaurants, seafood markets and the millions of Americans who don't have the means to catch their own fish. Currently, red snapper is shared roughly 50-50 between the two sectors and it should stay that way.

3.This "reallocation" is divisive, unfair and comes at a time when demand for local and sustainable seafood is at an all-time high.

4.Amendment 28 is also a false promise for recreational fishermen. Even the American Sportfishing Association, a group that supports the amendment, admits that reallocation, "will not result in a significant increase in allowable days to fish" for recreational fishermen. Better solutions for recreational fishermen exist, but policymakers have refused to try them.

5.Please oppose Amendment 28 and focus on real solutions for recreational fishermen that will actually extend seasons for anglers over the long-term instead of schemes that hurt the seafood industry and consumers. Hundreds of chefs, restaurant owners, seafood companies, trade associations, conservationists, fishermen and seafood lovers from all across the Gulf have already united in opposition to reallocation and decision makers should, too.

Please scrap this plan to take fresh American seafood away from the 98% of the public that cant go catch their own. The recreational sector represents 2% of the public but get half of Red Snapper and 80% of reef fish combined.

The people that fish for the public have made innovative improvements to be among the best managed fisheries in the world without taking a single fish from anyone. The recreational sector can do the same for everyone's benefit.

Please protect your consumers access and encourage the recreational sector to find ways to get more out of the fish they have rather than take them away from the public.

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

I am a retired Gulf of Mexico commercial fisherman. I started my commercial fishing career in August, 1976 and ended in May, 2013 when I sold my fishing vessel to another commercial fisherman.

I am writing in opposition to any changes in Amendment 28 Red Snapper Allocation. There are millions of people all over the United States who depend on a sustainable supply of fresh Gulf of Mexico Red Snapper. Most of these people can not afford the expense of catching their own Red Snapper or do not live on the Gulf coast. Most prefer to go to their seafood dealer or their favorite seafood restaurant to enjoy fresh Red Snapper. Please do not take fresh Gulf of Mexico Red Snapper off the dinner table from the majority of our citizens that do not live in the States that border the Gulf of Mexico. I hear recreational fisherman along the Gulf coast say "the Red Snapper in the Gulf of Mexico belong to us. Let us catch OUR fish."

I believe that the Gulf Red Snapper also belongs to every citizen in every state in the United States and they need a chance to enjoy these fish freshly caught and sustainable.

Please keep Amendment 28 at STATUS QUO. No changes. 51% commercial and 49% recreational. Thank You John Anderson

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

Please add your comments here. I would like to ask your support of the status quo in regard to A 28. amendment 28. At the present time the red snapper are shared by the commercial sector 51% managed by catch shares with no overage and 49% recreational sector with overages for every year except 2010 due to oil spill. I encourage the Gulf Council to come up with a management plan for the recreational sector that will ensure overfishing does not occur in the future and the fishery is sustainable.

The red snapper is a natural resource that belongs to the entire Nation for food and for commerce. . The GREAT MAJORITY of fish lovers in our ever growing population do not have access to this resource without the commercial sector. The demand for fresh fish is growing for both sectors. The red snapper catch promotes jobs, and incomes for both sectors.

As a chef, restaurateur, and recreational fisherman I am in favor of keeping the current allocation the same. 51% commercial and 49% recreational is fair and the red snapper population is growing. People of Louisiana who do not own boats should have access to the resource of our State by being able to buy Red Snapper in groceries and restaurants. Recreational fishermen will still get an increase as the quota is raised.

This "reallocation" is divisive, unfair and comes at a time when demand for local and sustainable seafood is at an all-time high. The National Restaurant Association lists locally sourced seafood as the #1 menu trend for the past four years in a row.

Amendment 28 is also a false promise for recreational fishermen. Even the American Sportfishing Association, a group that supports the amendment, admits that reallocation, "will not result in a significant increase in allowable days to fish" for recreational fishermen. Better solutions for recreational fishermen exist, but policymakers have refused to try them. Please oppose Amendment 28 and focus on real solutions for recreational fishermen that will actually extend seasons for anglers over the long-term instead of schemes that hurt the seafood industry and consumers. Hundreds of chefs, restaurant owners, seafood companies, trade associations, conservationists, fishermen and seafood lovers from all across the Gulf have already united in opposition to reallocation and decision makers should, too.

Subject: Proposal for equaling red snapper between commercial and recreational .

Sent from my iPad my name is william lee. I am a commercial fisherman in Mississippi and I am concerned about the change. First a little history about our business. Before the change to the IFQ system I had a reef permit and a class two red snapper permit. When I was going to purchase the reef permit I was told it was a well fished permit, but the owner that the permit belonged to had .died and the person I purchased the permit was " selling it for the family." so when I tried to get the hist Roy I was informed by the permits staff that I would need to get that from the( deceased owner" owner . When I explained that I wanted to find out to what extent it had been fished to which I was informed that with out his O.K. I could not get a history. So I bought it and when the change to the IFQ system I recieved only 1700 lbs. and when I complained I was told that it was based on the permit based on the previous owners records., not on what I would I could catch. On top of that our first first fishing trip we had to forfeit our catch because the only IFQ landing zone ( Clark's) refused to allow us to land our fish, so, with no place for us to land we had to find waterfront property to land the fish, to purchase a state permit, to buy and sell fish, then we had to get a federal permit to land IFQ species, after we had the property inspected by NOAA marine enforcement and approved while doing that we were not fishing due to the local people did not want any other fish than red snapper it has been only recently that other species. Then the B.P. Spill and we are just now to the point to having customers wanting fish of any type and you are about to take fish away from us. The second thing I am concerned about is, how are you going to monitor the recreational fishermen, how are you going to monitor their catch are you going to require them to get a reef fish permit, purchase a reef permit, force the to land their at an IFQ landing zone. If they are, are they going to pay the cost recovery fee or will the owners of the landing zone have to pay the fee and will we be allowed to charge them to make up the amount we will be out having to pay the cost recovery fee our self. Third if they are not going to have the above listed IFQ equipment. And if not why are we to be required to.

28b, I don't think any more fish should be given to the rec side until we are accountable.

Charter boats should have electronic reporting be mandatory, this does several things, let's you know true number of active permits and almost realtime catch numbers among others.

Rule 30b without mandatory reporting and a seperate CFh fmp needs to go away. It keeps me from going fishing in state waters for snapper whether with family or for hire. With a seperate fmp, it wouldn't matter.

I would like to give my customers the ability to retain red drum from the eez, it adds another fish to the box in these days of ever decreasing limits. The red drum is a success story for cca, 30 years running. I hope it doesn't take that long for the red snapper.

Sector seperation needs to happen, over the past 4-5 years you have danced all around the issue, done everything but call it like it is. I think voluntary seperation would be a good start and make a pilot as you have with the headboats. Use either the 3% untouched from the commercial side or maybe some from the buffer put into place in the rec side.

Thank you

Since fisheries need good management, and since recreational fishing quotas are usually exceeded where as commercial quotas are not, it makes no sense to increase the share of the fishing catch to recreational use.

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

As a seafood lover, I would encourage you to set fishing (sport/recreational and definitely commercial) protections for edible fishes in Florida waters to build up our reserves of mature, spawning fish until it is clear that the viable numbers have greatly improved. Protections have helped the grouper populations but easement of fishing restrictions on them should not happen yet as recovery is still tentative and snapper numbers are currently at an all-time low. Protections and fishing limits will help all of us in the short and long run, and I can look forward to many more enjoyable meals in the future if protections and limits are in place for all those who fish.

I would encourage you also to make hunting (& eating) lion fish, a predator invasive fish, a top priority.

As a Texan, small business owner and Chef, I am appalled at the possibility of unnecessarily meddling in the healthy Gulf seafood industry. I take pride in serving Gulf seafood whenever available and to think that sports fishing might affect the availability of our local seafood and affect those working hard to provide it saddens me. Recreation should not come in the way of a healthy industry and those that have worked so hard to keep their independent businesses. I oppose Amendment 28 and encourage leaders to address the recreational fishing issues without scheming against our healthy seafood industry. It doesn't make sense but is unfortunately representative of the money and influence driven way of governing we are used to. I hope this one won't be the same.

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

Thank you for taking the time to read this letter, your service to our great Lone Star state is something I greatly admire and appreciate.

My letter today is in regards to Amendment 28, as it is something that will greatly affect my family, and friends, as well as my customers and employees. My family has been in the seafood business since 1892, and because of this we have made many close relationships over the years with many who also make their living from the sea. Today, we have a seafood wholesale and retail store in San Antonio, and because of this we know just how poorly this amendment would affect commercial fishermen, chefs, consumers, and any other seafood lover.

As of now, the Gulf of Mexico's fishable red snapper population is shared between commercial and recreational fishermen. The latter has consistently over-fished their share of Gulf Red Snapper four of the last five years. In fact, the recreational fishery has overfished their quota by 15 million pounds from 1992 to 2012.

The first group involves commercial fishermen who, through deliberate and diligent accountability measures, have under-fished their quota an average of 2% each year since 2007. This industry is something very precious to those of us in it. Many of us, like myself, come from entire families who have made our entire livelihood off the ocean's bounty, so protecting that bounty for generations is something very near and dear to our hearts. For these reasons it makes no sense to me that you would consider a Red Snapper reallocation from the Gulf's responsible commercial fishermen to account for overages by our recreational contemporaries.

Amendment 28 would hurt our region's seafood industry by taking one of the most popular Gulf fish, red snapper, and giving more of it to a poorly-managed recreational sector at the expense of commercial fishermen, restaurants, seafood markets and the millions of Americans who don't have the means to catch their own fish.

Currently, red snapper is shared roughly 50-50 between the two sectors and it should stay that way.

Amendment 28 is also a false promise for recreational fishermen. Even the American Sportfishing Association, a group that supports the amendment, admits that reallocation, "will not result in a significant increase in allowable days to fish" for recreational fishermen. Better solutions for recreational fishermen exist, but policymakers have refused to try them.

We should not be asked to forfeit any allocation to sport fishermen who fail to be sustainable and manage their annual quota. Instead, I want you to develop better, more sustainable management systems for all sectors, just like the commercial fishermen who catch for me.

Please vote no on Amendment 28.

Sincerely,

Blake Groomer

To: Gulf Council
Subject: Oppose the Red Snapper Reallocation Scheme (Amendment 28)

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

Commercial and recreational fishing in the Gulf are both important to our heritage and our economy; we should not have to choose one at the expense of the other. Each contributes billions of dollars to the economy and sustains tens of thousands of jobs. But now there is a proposal that would force us to make this false choice and that's wrong.

This "reallocation" is divisive, unfair and comes at a time when demand for local and sustainable seafood is at an all-time high. The National Restaurant Association lists locally sourced seafood as the #1 menu trend for the past four years in a row.

Amendment 28 is also a false promise for recreational fishermen. Even the American Sportfishing Association, a group that supports the amendment, admits that reallocation, "will not result in a significant increase in allowable days to fish" for recreational fishermen. Better solutions for recreational fishermen exist, but policymakers have refused to try them. Please oppose Amendment 28 and focus on real solutions for recreational fishermen that will actually extend seasons for anglers over the long-term instead of schemes that hurt the seafood industry and consumers. Hundreds of chefs, restaurant owners, seafood companies, trade associations, conservationists, fishermen and seafood lovers from all across the Gulf have already united in opposition to reallocation and decision makers should, too.

Thank you very much for opposing the Red Snapper Reallocation Scheme.

Sincerely,

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

.At the present time commercial time, red snapper fishing is shared roughly 50-50 between recreational and commercial fish-erman. We should keep it that way. The restaurant eating public needs access to red snapper just as much as the recreational fisherman. There must be a better solution to sustainable for red snapper than this Amendment 28.

As a long time scuba and skin diver I have been dismayed to see a tragic decline of red snapper (and other table fish) in Florida waters over the past thirty years. I urge you to oppose Amendment 28 and add catch limits for both commercial and sport fisherman on our most divine local fish, the red snapper. Please extend protections for Groupers and all Snapper varieties before we are totally over-fished and have no breeding stock.

The fishermen who rely on the Gulf for their livelihood have struggled to stay in business in recent years. Making a favorite fish, the red snapper, a recreation-only fish is not fair, unless of course there is a scientific basis for the change, such as sustainability of the species. If commercial fishing is threatening the species survival, then the state needs to make this clearer to the citizens.

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

Our gulf needs your HELP NOW!!! YOU CAN HELP OUR LOCAL TOURISM INDUSTRY ALONG WITH THE RESTAURANTS AND RECREATIONAL FISHERMEN AND WOMAN like me!!!

Amendment 28 is a false promise for recreational fishermen. Even the American Sportfishing Association, a group that supports the amendment, admits that reallocation, "will not result in a significant increase in allowable days to fish" for recreational fishermen. Better solutions for recreational fishermen exist, but policymakers LIKE YOU have refused to try them. Please help now before it's too late!!

Please oppose Amendment 28 and focus on real solutions for recreational fishermen that will actually extend seasons for anglers over the long-term instead of schemes that hurt the seafood industry and consumers. Hundreds of chefs, restaurant owners, seafood companies, trade associations, conservationists, fishermen and seafood lovers from all across the Gulf have already united in opposition to reallocation and decision makers should, too.

Thank you for caring about our state and the people who live work and play here! Also Mother Nature needs our help and you need to be the one who oversees it!!

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

Please do not reallocate red snapper in the Gulf. Sustainability is the key and recreational fishermen should be happy to do their part if preserving this wonderful, tasty fish for future generations. Every species in nature has a purpose and any loss of species is critical to a chain of species. Professional fisherman also need to have their jobs preserved. There is a way to preserve the species and the professional fishing industry by putting them both before the sports fishing industry. All three can co-exist.

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

As a concerned consumer and citizen, I am writing because I am opposed to Amendment 28. There is no reason to change the 50-50 allocation of red snapper catches between recreational fishermen and commercial fishing. This reallocation is divisive and even the American Sportfishing Association recognizes that this amendment will not result in an increase in allowable fishing days for recreational fishermen.

There are workable solutions which all parties can and must arrive at for an agreement on to protect and enhance sustainable fishing in our gulf but Amendment 28 is NOT beneficial to any of the concerned parties.

Commercial and recreational fishing interests in the Gulf of Mexico must be supported by policymakers in arriving at a broad and sustainable plan for our Gulf fisheries.

Thank you for acting in the best interests of all interested parties to reach a mutually acceptable solution.

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

I write to ask you to oppose Amendment 28, which proposes a re-allocation of catch shares of red snapper by apportioning more of the catch to recreational fishers. Given the importance of commercial fishing and the restaurant industry to south Louisiana especially, such a change creates the risk of real economic loss. Please instead concentrate on solutions that will increase the number of fish of these vulnerable species in the Gulf.

Thank you for showing leadership on this issue.

Subject: Oppose the Red Snapper Reallocation Scheme (Amendment 28)

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

Amendment 28 would hurt the Gulf region's seafood industry by taking one of the most popular Gulf fish, red snapper, and giving more of it to a poorly-managed recreational sector at the expense of commercial fishermen, restaurants, seafood markets and the millions of American consumers. Currently, red snapper is shared roughly 50-50 between the two sectors and it should stay that way. Each sector contributes billions of dollars to the economy and sustains tens of thousands of jobs. Amendment 28 is a false promise for recreational fishermen.

Please oppose Amendment 28 and focus on real solutions for recreational fishermen that will actually extend seasons for anglers over the long-term instead of schemes that hurt the seafood industry and consumers.

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

Please support legislation that provides better solutions for recreational fishing of red snapper and vote AGAINST Amendment 28 AND support both the food industry and the professional fishing industry at the same time.

The Gulf is still recovering from major environmental damage from the oil spill a couple of years ago. Economically, it is critical to maintain sound management practices of the red snapper which currently is shared 50- 50 between recreational and food industries, each of which contribute billions of dollars to our economy.

Yet Amendment 28 would detrimentally change that balance hurting the seafood industry which is a rapidly growing market, especially since recreational fishermen over the run could be furthered by extending the actual seasons for recreational fishing.

This "reallocation" is divisive, unfair and comes at a time when demand for local and sustainable seafood is at an all-time high. The National Restaurant Association lists locally sourced seafood as the #1 menu trend for the past four years in a row.

Amendment 28 is also a false promise for recreational fishermen. Even the American Sportfishing Association, a group that supports the amendment, admits that reallocation, "will not result in a significant increase in allowable days to fish" for recreational fishermen. Better solutions for recreational fishermen exist, but policymakers have refused to try them.

This "reallocation" is divisive, unfair and comes at a time when demand for local and sustainable seafood is at an all-time high. The National Restaurant Association lists locally sourced seafood as the #1 menu trend for the past four years in a row.

Amendment 28 is also a false promise for recreational fishermen. Even the American Sportfishing Association, a group that supports the amendment, admits that reallocation, "will not result in a significant increase in allowable days to fish" for recreational fishermen. Better solutions for recreational fishermen exist, but policymakers have refused to try them. Please oppose Amendment 28 and focus on real solutions for recreational fishermen that will actually extend seasons for anglers over the long-term instead of schemes that hurt the seafood industry and consumers. Hundreds of chefs, restaurant owners, seafood companies, trade associations, conservationists, fishermen and seafood lovers from all across the Gulf have already united in opposition to reallocation and decision makers should, too.

In light of economic down turns in the recent years, the loss of America as a super power/or even it seems as viable contender due to our sell-off of jobs and quality of like, it only is common sense that some goverment decisions start solidifying the american economy and industry on and within our shores.

Please start thinking of the people who vote in this country and the fact that we were once a hard-working nation. It is our goverment who allowed the loss of jobs and standing globally. Stop that trend and keep our industry local.

Subject: Oppose the Red Snapper Reallocation Scheme (Amendment 28)

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

"Amendment 28" would hurt our region's seafood industry by taking one of the most popular Gulf fish, red snapper, and giving more of it to a poorly-managed recreational sector at the expense of commercial fishermen, restaurants, seafood markets and the millions of Americans who don't have the means to catch their own fish. Currently, red snapper is shared roughly 50-50 between the two sectors and it should stay that way.

Amendment 28 is also a false promise for recreational fishermen. Even the American Sportfishing Association, a group that supports the amendment, admits that reallocation, "will not result in a significant increase in allowable days to fish" for recreational fishermen. Better solutions for recreational fishermen exist, but policymakers have refused to try them.

This "reallocation" comes at a time when demand for local and sustainable seafood is at an all-time high.

I urge you to oppose Amendment 28 and focus on real solutions for recreational fishermen that will actually extend seasons for anglers over the long-term instead of schemes that hurt the seafood industry and consumers.

There are case studies of other regions dealing with quota issues, and some bright spots have emerged. I am happy to share with you the work of Duke University researchers on approaches to sustainable fishing management that are dealing with multiple stakeholders in a manner somewhat better than the current "mad rush" occurring every season for Snapper.

Write Gulf Leaders

2013EDFTX059A decision will be coming soon and we need your help to make sure our Gulf leaders know that any change in the current allocation of red snapper would be bad for consumers and businesses across the Gulf of Mexico.

Please send a letter to your Governor and the Gulf of Mexico Fishery Management Council telling them to oppose any reallocation scheme for red snapper and to refocus their efforts on new management options for recreational fishermen that will actually improve fishing opportunities for Gulf fishermen.

Please tell them why maintaining fair and sustainable access to Gulf seafood is important to you.

Personalized letters are the most effective, but below are a few key points to get you started.

1. Commercial and recreational fishing in the Gulf are both important to our heritage and our economy; we should not have to choose one at the expense of the other. Each contributes billions of dollars to the economy and sustains tens of thousands of jobs. But now there is a proposal that would force us to make this false choice and that's wrong.

2. "Amendment 28" would hurt our region's seafood industry by taking one of the most popular Gulf fish, red snapper, and giving more of it to a poorly-managed recreational sector at the expense of commercial fishermen, restaurants, seafood markets and the millions of Americans who don't have the means to catch their own fish. Currently, red snapper is shared roughly 50-50 between the two sectors and it should stay that way.

4. Amendment 28 is also a false promise for recreational fishermen. Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

Commercial and recreational fishing in the Gulf are both important to our heritage and our economy; we should not have to choose one at the expense of the other. Each contributes billions of dollars to the economy and sustains tens of thousands of jobs. But now there is a proposal that would force us to make this false choice and that's wrong.

This "reallocation" is divisive, unfair and comes at a time when demand for local and sustainable seafood is at an all-time high. The National Restaurant Association lists locally sourced seafood as the #1 menu trend for the past four years in a row.

Amendment 28 is also a false promise for recreational fishermen. Dear Governor Perry and Gulf Council Members:

I strongly oppose Amendment 28 because the allocation of stocks should remain roughly 50-50 between recreational and commercial sectors.

For years I have been part of the campaign to get people to eat sustainable, local fish species. These efforts are beginning to pay off and would be undermined by allowing sport fishers to take a larger share of dwindling fish supplies.

The proposal is unnecessarily divisive and I urge you to oppose the proposal.

The Gulf belongs to all of us. It always has and it always should. Fresh, local seafood is important to our economy, our heritage and our way of life along the Gulf. Let's keep it that way.

Please oppose any reallocation scheme for red snapper and refocus efforts on new management options for recreational fishermen that will actually improve fishing opportunities for Gulf fishermen.

Thank you,

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

1. Commercial and recreational fishing in the Gulf are both important to our heritage and our economy; we should not have to choose one at the expense of the other. Each contributes billions of dollars to the economy and sustains tens of thousands of jobs. But now there is a proposal that would force us to make this false choice and that's wrong.
3. This "reallocation" is divisive, unfair and comes at a time when demand for local and sustainable seafood is at an all-time high. The National Restaurant Association lists locally sourced seafood as the #1 menu trend for the past four years in a row.
4. Amendment 28 is also a false promise for recreational fishermen. Even the American Sportfishing Association, a group that supports the amendment, admits that reallocation, "will not result in a significant increase in allowable days to fish" for recreational fishermen. Better solutions for recreational fishermen exist, but policymakers have refused to try them.
5. Please oppose Amendment 28 and focus on real solutions for recreational fishermen that will actually extend seasons for anglers over the long-term instead of schemes that hurt the seafood industry and consumers. Hundreds of chefs, restaurant owners, seafood companies, trade associations, conservationists, fishermen and seafood lovers from all across the Gulf have already united in opposition to reallocation and decision makers should, too.

Commercial and recreational fishing in the Gulf are both important to our heritage and our economy. There's nothing better than hitting Padre and getting the catch of the day, which really means it was just off the coast this morning. That's too awesome to lose.

"Amendment 28" would hurt our region's seafood industry. I'm saying the recreational sector isn't important and valuable, but there needs to be a balance that lets everyone prosper.

This "reallocation" is divisive, unfair and comes at a time when demand for local and sustainable seafood is at an all-time high.

Amendment 28 is also a false promise for recreational fishermen. If the American Sportfishing Association recognizes it doesn't benefit them, why are we doing it again?

Please oppose Amendment 28 and focus on real solutions for recreational fishermen that will actually extend seasons for anglers

I am against implementing Sector Separation for the Gulf of Mexico.

I am against recreational catch shares and individual fish tags in the Gulf of Mexico.

I believe a federal inquiry into the Commerce Department's action to pilot a program which takes 5% of the recreational fishing quota away from anglers should be opened immediately.

I also believe this pilot program is unfair, unethical, and I support the Recreational Fishing Alliance in questioning the overall legality of just such a program which financially rewards the few while penalizing the many.

I also believe NMFS has been derelict in its duties to fix the recreational data collection in a timely process and will be asking my member of Congress to take immediate action to hold our government accountable for its gross neglect of our recreational fishing community.

As a recreational angler, I would ask that the Gulf of Mexico Fiyshery Management Council vote down Reef Fish Amendment 28.

It is absolutely absurd that the commercial guy can go out and literally kill the red snapper, yet I am stuck with 2 fish and a crappy window to catch them in. I am curious how much money the counsel receives for the mismanagement of a natural resource. (That is not on the books). It has to be a major amount. I hope that you all get caught with your hands in the till.

How could a commercial fisherman have any more rights than a regular citizen!!!!!! They are overfishing snapper everyday they go out.

Commercial and recreational fishing in the Gulf are both important to our heritage and our economy; we should not have to choose one at the expense of the other. Each contributes billions of dollars to the economy and sustains tens of thousands of jobs. But now there is a proposal that would force us to make this false choice and that's wrong. "Amendment 28" would hurt our region's seafood industry by taking one of the most popular Gulf fish, red snapper, and giving more of it to a poorly-managed recreational sector at the expense of commercial fishermen, restaurants, seafood markets and the millions of Americans who don't have the means to catch their own fish. Currently, red snapper is shared roughly 50-50 between the two sectors and it should stay that way.

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

Please note that I am against Amendment 28. My reasons:

Commercial and recreational fishing in the Gulf are both important to our heritage and our economy; we should not have to choose one at the expense of the other. Each contributes billions of dollars to the economy and sustains tens of thousands of jobs. But now there is a proposal that would force us to make this false choice and that's wrong.

This "reallocation" is divisive, unfair and comes at a time when demand for local and sustainable seafood is at an all-time high. The National Restaurant Association lists locally sourced seafood as the #1 menu trend for the past four years in a row.

Amendment 28 is also a false promise for recreational fishermen. Even the American Sportfishing Association, a group that supports the amendment, admits that reallocation, "will not result in a significant increase in allowable days to fish" for recreational fishermen. Better solutions for recreational fishermen exist, but policymakers have refused to try them.

Please oppose Amendment 28 and focus on real solutions for recreational fishermen that will actually extend seasons for anglers over the long-term instead of schemes that hurt the seafood industry and consumers. Hundreds of chefs, restaurant owners, seafood companies, trade associations, conservationists, fishermen and seafood lovers from all across the Gulf have already united in opposition to reallocation and decision makers should, too.

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

Amendment 28 is a joke. It in no way actually extends allowable fishing days for recreational fishermen. There are better solutions. Why are those solutions not being tried?

With so many businesses, thus individual workers, being hurt in the current economy, one would think policymakers would be willing to try something else...something evenhanded. The opposition from conservationist, seafood companies, restaurants, and seafood consumers in unison against Amendment 28 is not going to die down and for good reason.

Do the right thing in this case and be willing to give the other options a chance to work. Red snapper in particular is one of the biggest selling fish coming from the Gulf. The recreational sector hasn't proven it's ability to handle the management of the seafood industry in the Gulf and until it does, something like Amendment 28 shouldn't even be looked at even remotely seriously.

Thank you.

It does no good to submit a comment to him, because he does not care about people of Louisiana, look what he is doing about the A C A - there are so many people he could be helping by allowing the government to provide medicaid coverage to Louisiana Citizens that need it, and it would not cost the state one red dime. The federal government would cover it like they do for all other medicaid and medicare, So it just proves to you that he just does not care about us....period, And the guy that wants to come after him. Subject: Oppose the Red Snapper Reallocation Scheme (Amendment 28)

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

1. Commercial and recreational fishing in the Gulf are both important to our heritage and our economy; we should not have to choose one at the expense of the other. Each contributes billions of dollars to the economy and sustains tens of thousands of jobs. But now there is a proposal that would force us to make this false choice and that's wrong.

2. "Amendment 28" would hurt our region's seafood industry by taking one of the most popular Gulf fish, red snapper, and giving more of it to a poorly-managed recreational sector at the expense of commercial fishermen, restaurants, seafood markets and the millions of Americans who don't have the means to catch their own fish. Currently, red snapper is shared roughly 50-50 between the two sectors and it should stay that way.

3. This "reallocation" is divisive, unfair and comes at a time when demand for local and sustainable seafood is at an all-time high. The National Restaurant Association lists locally sourced seafood as the #1 menu trend for the past four years in a row.

4. Amendment 28 is also a false promise for recreational fishermen. Even the American Sportfishing Association, a group that supports the amendment, admits that reallocation, "will not result in a significant increase in allowable days to fish" for recreational fishermen. Better solutions for recreational fishermen exist, but policymakers have refused to try them.

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

I would like to ask that you maintain fair and sustainable access to Gulf seafood and to PLEASE OPPOSE AMENDMENT 28 and focus on real solutions for recreational fisherman.

Here are a few key points as to why you should oppose Amendment 28:

1. Commercial and recreational fishing in the Gulf are both important to our heritage and our economy; we should not have to choose one at the expense of the other. Each contributes billions of dollars to the economy and sustains tens of thousands of jobs. But now there is a proposal that would force us to make this false choice and that's wrong.
2. 3. This "reallocation" is divisive, unfair and comes at a time when demand for local and sustainable seafood is at an all-time high. The National Restaurant Association lists locally sourced seafood as the #1 menu trend for the past four years in a row.
4. Amendment 28 is also a false promise for recreational fishermen. Even the American Sportfishing Association, a group that supports the amendment, admits that reallocation, "will not result in a significant increase in allowable days to fish" for recreational fishermen. It is unfair to misallocate access to Gulf Coast fishing so that commercial fisherman, restaurants, fish markets and consumers no longer have 50% of the wild fish caught in the gulf.

I NEVER BUY FARMED FISH AND NEVER WILL. I HATE THE IDEA OF FARMED FISH. IT IS REVOLTING TO THINK OF FISH HELD CAPTIVE AND SWIMMING IN THEIR OWN WASTE. IT IS CRUEL. IT IS UNNATURAL.

I NEVER ORDER FISH IN A RESTAURANT THAT IS NOT WILD AND I NEVER BUY IT FROM A GROCER IF IT IS NOT WILD.

I drove by a fish farm in Texas. It stank to high heaven.

My husband and I live on the coast near Carrabelle. We know how important seafood from the Gulf is to the local economy. It is also important to us because we are vegetarians who rely on local seafood for our main source of protein. We are retired and live on Social Security, so we can't afford our own boat. We need to be able to buy seafood from our local fish houses at a reasonable price. Please don't reallocate our seafood to the big boaters with the big bucks.

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

I live here and feel extremely blessed to be able to enjoy the extraordinary seafood from the Gulf. The fish in this area have suffered greatly from poor fisheries management in the past. They are just starting to recover. Amendment 28 would cause one of the most popular fish, red snapper to be managed by less organized recreational sector, at the expense of local restaurants and commercial fishermen.

Please oppose Amendment 28 and focus on long term solutions that will actually extend the season for anglers. Hundreds of chefs, commercial fishermen, trade associations, conservation organizations, seafood companies and restaurants oppose this amendment. These are my neighbors, these are the people who keep the economy going. You can keep the economy going too, make the right long term decision and got against Amendment 28.

Subject: Oppose the Red Snapper Reallocation Scheme (Amendment 28)

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

We need to take better care of the Gulf.

Commercial and recreational fishing in the Gulf are both important to our heritage and our economy; we should not have to choose one at the expense of the other. Each contributes billions of dollars to the economy and sustains tens of thousands of jobs. But now there is a proposal that would force us to make this false choice and that's wrong.

This "reallocation" is divisive, unfair and comes at a time when demand for local and sustainable seafood is at an all-time high. The National Restaurant Association lists locally sourced seafood as the #1 menu trend for the past four years in a row.

Amendment 28 is also a false promise for recreational fishermen. Even the American Sportfishing Association, a group that supports the amendment, admits that reallocation, "will not result in a significant increase in allowable days to fish" for recreational fishermen. Better solutions for recreational fishermen exist, but policymakers have refused to try them. Please oppose Amendment 28 and focus on real solutions for recreational fishermen that will actually extend seasons for anglers over the long-term instead of schemes that hurt the seafood industry and consumers. Hundreds of chefs, restaurant owners, seafood companies, trade associations, conservationists, fishermen and seafood lovers from all across the Gulf have already united in opposition to reallocation and decision makers should, too.

Adding additional red snapper quota to the recreational fishery and reducing the commercial catch quota will result in a net loss of jobs in florida and possibly increase the incidental catch mortality for this valuable fish.

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

The health and welfare of the Gulf of Mexico is important every state & country which borders it. This include the great state of Florida. The Gulf is as important to fishing as it is to tourists and locals, who depend on the Gulf got their livelihood. Without adequate protection of its marine life, the state of Florida is doomed in more ways than anyone can imagine. The Gulf is as much a part of the state of Florida as the Everglades. One is not independent of the other, but rather, all interconnected & must function as one. This symbiosis must be protected & Amendment 28 opposed. Thank you.

This "reallocation" is divisive, unfair and comes at a time when demand for local and sustainable seafood is at an all-time high. The National Restaurant Association lists locally sourced seafood as the #1 menu trend for the past four years in a row.

Amendment 28 is also a false promise for recreational fishermen. Even the American Sportfishing Association, a group that supports the amendment, admits that reallocation "will not result in a significant increase in allowable days to fish" for recreational fishermen. Better solutions for recreational fishermen exist, but policymakers have refused to try them.

Oppose Amendment 28 and focus on real solutions for recreational fishermen that will actually extend seasons for anglers over the long-term instead of schemes that hurt the seafood industry and consumers. Hundreds of chefs, restaurant owners, seafood companies, trade associations, conservationists, fishermen and seafood lovers from all across the Gulf have already united in opposition to reallocation and decision makers should, too.

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

I enjoy eating seafood, especially when I know it's locally sourced. I love it local because then I know that me purchasing it is supporting recreational fishermen instead of tons of machinery, so I know that it provides countless more jobs. I like the fact that it doesn't have to be shipped extra long distances and waste gas. I like how it lets me know that my local community still has healthy, sustainable fishing. But the red snapper reallocation scheme threatens to take that joy away from citizens like me. I feel like reallocating red snapper would be an abandonment of the Gulf, at a time when it still needs so much help. Please oppose Amendment 28, for the sake of my home state of Florida, and for all the other places that would be negatively impacted by this amendment's passing.

Subject: Oppose the Red Snapper Reallocation Scheme (Amendment 28)

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

After reading current material regarding Amendment 28, I feel the reallocation scheme proposed by the document doesn't really provide an appropriate resolution to the concerns of the recreational fishermen who have expressed their concerns about the number of allowable days to fish and thus, enabling them to garner a larger share of the Red Snapper that is available to ALL who fish the Gulf.

The commercial fishing industry provides red snapper to multiple populations and food based industries, not only those of all states bordering the Gulf, but any place around the globe, through export. This industry contributes significant dollars to the overall economy of these states, and to our country.

We know this issue is an important one to both the commercial and recreational fishing industries. It is also a delicate issue to ensure that both special interests are treated fairly and honestly without our economy suffering any negative consequences that will impact other aspects of our state's economic recovery and growth.

For this, and many other related reasons, please oppose Amendment 28 and extend our opportunities to finding one, or more, solutions to resolving this issue. Perhaps a special, non-government, investigative committee could be formed including representatives of ALL interested parties who could work together to identify ALL of the problems with the current system, and then seek workable and agreeable solutions.

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

Commercial and recreational fishing in the Gulf are both important to our heritage and our economy; we should not have to choose one at the expense of the other. Each contributes billions of dollars to the economy and sustains tens of thousands of jobs. But now there is a proposal that would force us to make this false choice and that's wrong.

This "reallocation" is divisive, unfair and comes at a time when demand for local and sustainable seafood is at an all-time high. The National Restaurant Association lists locally sourced seafood as the #1 menu trend for the past four years in a row.

Amendment 28 is also a false promise for recreational fishermen. Even the American Sportfishing Association, a group that supports the amendment, admits that reallocation, "will not result in a significant increase in allowable days to fish" for recreational fishermen. Better solutions for recreational fishermen exist, but policymakers have refused to try them.

Please oppose Amendment 28 and focus on real solutions for recreational fishermen that will actually extend seasons for anglers over the long-term instead of schemes that hurt the seafood industry and consumers. Hundreds of chefs, restaurant owners, seafood companies, trade associations, conservationists, fishermen and seafood lovers from all across the Gulf have already united in opposition to reallocation and decision makers should, too.

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

Curbing overfishing and exploitation of the red snapper is crucial to not just the sustainability and survival of the species, but to all of the other species whose own populations are interconnected to them as well. Sure the shell game of reallocation may look good as a short term solution, but in the words of my Papa: "Someone is being windy in their fish story."

Off the coasts of Oregon and Northern California, the salmon fishermen moaned and groaned about a 3 year moratorium on fishing, but when presented with the longterm prospects of having zero livelihood in a few short years because they refused to allow the population to recover to sustainable levels, they relented. The same was true for abalone. They relented and in less than two years there was a notable increase in population levels and the fish were heartier. Granted now there are water issues plaguing spawning grounds, but the results spoke for themselves.

The success rate was so huge that Marine Protected Areas and overfished species management plans implemented along much of the coast with impressive results.

There are longterm considerations that should be considered. Stop being a hinderance to the return of our beautiful gulf and the ecology within and give sustainability an honest chance.

Better solutions for recreational fishermen exist, but policymakers have refused to try them.

Please oppose Amendment 28 and focus on real solutions for recreational fishermen that will actually extend seasons for anglers over the long-term instead of schemes that hurt the seafood industry and consumers. Hundreds of chefs, restaurant owners, seafood companies, trade associations, conservationists, fishermen and seafood lovers from all across the Gulf have already united in opposition to reallocation and decision makers should, too.

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

I write to ask for your support, please.

1. Commercial and recreational fishing in the Gulf are both important to our heritage and our economy; we should not have to choose one at the expense of the other. Each contributes billions of dollars to the economy and sustains tens of thousands of jobs. But now there is a proposal that would force us to make this false choice and that's wrong.

2. "Amendment 28" would hurt our region's seafood industry by taking one of the most popular Gulf fish, red snapper, and giving more of it to a poorly-managed recreational sector at the expense of commercial fishermen, restaurants, seafood markets and the millions of Americans who don't have the means to catch their own fish. Currently, red snapper is shared roughly 50-50 between the two sectors and it should stay that way.

3. This "reallocation" is divisive, unfair and comes at a time when demand for local and sustainable seafood is at an all-time high. The National Restaurant Association lists locally sourced seafood as the #1 menu trend for the past four years in a row.

4. Amendment 28 is also a false promise for recreational fishermen. Even the American Sportfishing Association, a group that supports the amendment, admits that reallocation, "will not result in a significant increase in allowable days to fish" for recreational fishermen. Better solutions for recreational fishermen exist, but policymakers have refused to try them.

5. Please oppose Amendment 28 and focus on real solutions for recreational fishermen that will actually extend seasons for anglers over the long-term instead of schemes that hurt the seafood industry and consumers. Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

This "reallocation" is divisive, unfair and comes at a time when demand for local and sustainable seafood is at an all-time high. The National Restaurant Association lists locally sourced seafood as the #1 menu trend for the past four years in a row.

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

Commercial and recreational fishing in the Gulf are both important to our heritage and our economy; we should not have to choose one at the expense of the other. Each contributes billions of dollars to the economy and sustains tens of thousands of jobs. But now there is a proposal that would force us to make this false choice and that's wrong.

Dear Governor and Gulf Council Members:

Alabamians depend on both commercial and recreational fishing, and both are vital to the people of Alabama as well as all of the Gulf states. Alabama's economy cannot sustain yet another blow. Please consider other solutions rather than the reallocation of red snapper plan. Is there a good enough reason to change the ratio of 50-50? I urge you to oppose Amendment 28.

To: Gulf Council

Dear sirs:

Having grown up in Lake Charles in the mid sixties I as some of your senior members have seen monumental changes in not only our fisheries but in our regulations.

Bach in the early sixties, no one even thought about going fishing for red drum. The only quality fishing was for red snapper. Charter boats with ten to twelve guys would go out for a day's fishing at the ten and twelve mile rigs and come back loaded with snapper. We caught them til our shoulders gave out from pulling them in. We caught too many. We now realize how detrimental that is to the long term health of the fishery and we also now know that the life blood of protecting that fishery is not the commercial fishermen , but is the recreational guy and all the economic spinoff from his fishing efforts.

Set a fair quota for the commercial harvest, open it to all and then close the season when that quota is met. Set the same quota for the recreational fishers and then close it when reached or reduce the catch limit permanent until the quota is met.

To take my grandchildren out, charter a boat and captain for three or even five fish is awfully frustrating. We can do better with the information we have about our populations and reproduction numbers. Recreational fishing keeps those small coastal towns economically healthy. To lessen our ability to participate in reasonable fishing will ultimately curtail even our resources to study the fishing we love.

Sincerely yours,

Stephen D Shorts, MD

one of the main reasons for your current red snapper populations is the lack of shrimping on their spawning grounds due to fuel costs up and shrimp down. they used to kill millions according to your reports back in the 70s. don't envy your job and hope you can appease the big rec numbers and still do right by commercial because they feed those that can't afford to fish. everyone owns these fish not any one group! Thank you. Van Hubbard

See table 37

This is the report that is being used and one of the biggest reports was done by Brad Gethner. Who now sits on our SSC and did a report using this. Our SSC and SEP turned down his report. He did the report for CCA using the willingness to pay theory.

If you read this report you will see that it can not be applied to the red snapper fishery in the gulf. It was not done in the Gulf area. He took results from another area and has used it as being true in all states. You can not ask for this information in table 37 for an example and not ask similar questions of the commercial industry and where is the report from the consumers of the resource.

I expressed my concerns earlier and now I would like them entered into the record for amendment 28.

I would also like to go on record as having issues with all of our fishery management plans that used this report in their EIS or DEIS based on The author and his association with CCA. I also have issues with the questions asked to be used as value against what is used in the commercial industry. Some are listed in table 37.

Please provide this email to all the members of the council and our SSC and SEP members.

ABSTRACT

Marine recreational fishing is a popular outdoor leisure activity nationwide when measured by number of participants. The National Marine Fisheries Service estimates that 24.7 million saltwater anglers fished 127.2 million days in the coastal states of the U.S. in 2006. In this report, we quantify the level of fishing expenditures for these anglers within each coastal state and the U.S. as a whole. At the U.S. level, we estimate that saltwater anglers spent an estimated $5.8 billion on trip-based expenditures (e.g., ice, bait, and fuel) and another $25.6 billion on fishing equipment and durable goods (e.g., fishing rods, fishing tackle, and boats) in 2006. In the second exercise carried out for this study we conduct a regional input-output assessment to examine how those expenditures circulated through each state's economy as well as the economy of the entire U.S. We show that as angler expenditures filtered through the U.S. economy, they contributed an estimated $82.3 billion in total sales, $39.1 billion in value-added (i.e., contribution to gross domestic product), $24.0 billion in income, and supported nearly 534 thousand jobs in the U.S.

INTRODUCTION

The National Marine Fisheries Service (NMFS) has been collecting marine recreational catch, effort, and participation data since 1979 in an effort to assess the influence of recreational fishing on fish stocks. With the passing of the Magnuson-Stevenson Fishery Conservation and Management Act (MSFCMA) in 1996, Congress additionally mandated the analysis of the economic impacts on fishing participants and coastal communities of management policies. In response, NMFS began to conduct a series of marine angler expenditure surveys in the coastal regions of the U.S. in 1998. The first surveys were administered in the Northeast Region in 1998, in the Southeast Region in 1999, and in the Pacific Region in 2000. The purpose of the survey efforts was to provide data to quantify recreational fishing expenditures and the economic impacts (i.e., effects) of the expenditures in each region and the U.S. as a whole. A separate publication for each region (Steinback and Gentner, 2001; Gentner, Price, and Steinback, 2001a; Gentner, Price, and Steinback, 2001b) summarized the survey results and provided state-level estimates of expenditures by marine recreational fishermen. In a fourth publication (Steinback, Gentner, and Castle, 2004), the data from the first three reports were used to assess the total economic impacts of anglers' saltwater expenditures within each of the regions and the U.S. overall.

The angler expenditure and impact estimates shown in those four reports provides policy analysts with information to assess the economic effects of recreational fishing activities to communities and fishery dependent and independent businesses. Angler expenditures and the economic impacts generated from the expenditures changes over time, however. As recreational fishing becomes increasingly regulated in the U.S. it essential that state and federal regulators have access to the most recent expenditure data available. In this report we show the results of the second endeavor by NMFS to collect and quantify marine recreational fishing expenditures and the economic impacts generated from angler expenditures. For this second round of marine angler expenditure surveys, data were collected from anglers fishing in all of the coastal states in the Nation in 2006. The results shown here provide updated estimates of angler expenditures and economic impacts for every coastal state in the Nation and the U.S. overall. At the U.S. level, we estimate that saltwater anglers spent an estimated $5.8 billion on trip-based expenditures (e.g., ice, bait, and fuel) and another $25.6 billion on fishing equipment and durable goods (e.g., fishing rods, fishing tackle, and boats) in 2006. We also show that as these angler expenditures filtered through the U.S. economy, they generated an estimated $82.3 billion in total sales, $39.1 billion in value-added (i.e., contribution to gross domestic product), $24.0 billion in income, and supported nearly 534 thousand jobs.

The report begins with a description of the survey sampling design and the completion statistics. The methods used to estimate mean angler expenditures, total angler expenditures, and economic impacts are shown next and then the expenditure and impact results are presented in four separate regional sections: the Northeast, Southeast, Pacific Coast, and Hawaii. Results for the entire U.S. are shown in a separate section. A number of statistical tests were conducted to examine the potential effects of non-response bias and survey mode differences and these findings are also discussed. The last section places the study results in context relative to the expenditure and impact estimates previously collected by NMFS and to angler expenditure estimates produced by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (USFWS) in 2006. The last section also provides some concluding remarks regarding model assumptions and limitations.

DATA COLLECTION INSTRUMENTS

Across the U.S. there currently is no complete and consistent frame of saltwater anglers as some coastal states do not require a saltwater license. Therefore, this survey effort utilized a number of sampling frames. The Marine Recreational Information Program (MRIP) conducts an intercept creel survey in the state of Hawaii and in all of the states on the East and Gulf Coasts, excluding Texas. The MRIP survey platform represents the best, most consistent sample frame for saltwater anglers in states covered by the MRIP. Within the MRIP coverage area, an add-on to the intercept survey was used to collect expenditures resulting from the intercepted trip and to gather a frame for mailing a follow-up survey regarding annual durable expenditures. However, there are coverage gaps in the MRIP for collecting national level data as the entire West Coast, Texas, and Alaska are not covered. In those states, license frames were utilized to contact anglers via a mail survey regarding both trip and durable good purchases.

The MRIP

The MRIP consists of two independent and complementary surveys. These two surveys are stratified to provide independent estimates of catch, effort, and participation across states, fishing modes, and two month waves through each year. The fishing modes used for this stratification are: shore mode, private or rental boat mode, and party or charter boat mode. This method of stratification has proven useful for developing estimates annually or seasonally and it allows individual regions to easily add sample within strata to increase the precision of the estimates.

The first survey is an intercept survey of marine anglers at fishing access sites. This survey attempts to obtain a random sample of all marine recreational fishing trips. The MRIP maintains a list of over 6,000 sites in a master site list, which is continuously updated. Each of these sites is ranked by an index of relative fishing pressure by mode, month, and weekday or weekend designation. For a given date, interviewers are assigned to a specific site and to a specific mode of fishing. Interviewers are also given two adjacent, alternate sites if a minimum number of interviews cannot be obtained at the original site assignment. Sampling for private/rental and party/charter modes is conducted after the angler's fishing day has been completed. Sampling for the shore mode may be conducted when at least two-thirds of the fishing for the day has been completed and the angler then estimates total trip effort.

The intercept sampling implies a three-stage-sampling framework. In stage one, a given site/day is randomly selected with probability of assignment proportional to the fishing pressure index of the site for that specific day (Cochran 1977). The second stage involves the selection of angling parties, boatloads, groups, or individuals, at the assigned site. Finally, stage three involves possible sub-sampling among the angling parties selected in stage two. Selection of parties (stage 2) and sub-sampling among parties (stage 3) is assumed random with equal probabilities. This allows the use of self-weighting estimators to obtain mean catch-per-trip estimates for each species across all strata.

This intercept survey is a creel survey primarily used to estimate mean catch-per-trip by species. Data elements collected during the base part of the intercept survey include state, county, and zip code of residence, hours fished, primary area fished, target species, gear used, and days fished in the last two and 12 months. The creel portion of the survey collects length and weight of all fish species retained by the angler and the species and disposition of all catch not retained by the angler.

For a given stratum, estimates of mean catch-per-trip multiplied by an estimate of the total number of trips (effort) equals the total catch for that stratum. The effort estimates are obtained through the second part of this survey process; the telephone survey of coastal households. Residential households are sampled randomly using the random digit dialing technique as described by Groves et al. (1988). All anglers in the contacted household are identified, and each is asked about their fishing activity for the previous two-month period. Multiple attempts are made to contact identified anglers. This survey is used to estimate effort by coastal residents living in households with telephones. Ratios from the intercept survey are used to correct these effort estimates to account for non-coastal residents and coastal residents who do not have telephones, as those groups are not covered in the household sampling frame. Data elements collected for this survey include the number of trips in the last two months and the number of trips in the last 12 months. For trips in the last two months, trip dates, mode, time of return, and state of access are also collected.

In NMFS' previous angler expenditure data collection efforts an intercept add-on survey was used to collect a few basic demographic characteristics and a respondent telephone number. The telephone number was then used to contact the angler to collect trip and durable expenditure information via a telephone follow-up survey. To increase sample sizes for the trip expenditure data, the trip-level questions were moved to the intercept add-on survey. This change in methodology reduced standard errors, increasing the precision of the trip expenditure estimates.

The economic intercept survey (Appendix 1) obtained overnight trip information, from those on overnight trips, including number of days away from residence, number of days spent fishing, lodging expenses, and the purpose of the trip. All anglers were asked travel costs, days of fishing in last two months, fishing ability, boat ownership, and trip supply expenditures (bait, ice, refreshments, boat fees, etc.).

Interviewers attempted to collect trip expenditure data from every participant in the creel portion of the survey. In the states where the MRIP survey was conducted, a total of 110,719 economic add-ons were attempted and 99,755 contained at least a home zip code allowing the calculation of travel distance and private transportation expenditures (Table 1). Overall, 68,632 respondents (62.0%) completed the trip expenditure portion of the MRIP economic intercept survey and 20,679 of those respondents (30.1%) supplied a mailing address. Intercept survey participants supplying a mailing address were then sent a mail survey to obtain durable expenditure information.

Mail Survey

The MRIP mail follow-up survey was dedicated to the collection of durable expenditures, socioeconomic, and demographic data (Appendix 2). Expenditure data categories included semi-durable goods (tackle, rods, reels, line, etc.), durable goods (motor boats and accessories, non-motorized boats, boating electronics, mooring, boat storage, boat insurance and vehicles or homes) and angling accessories and multi-purpose items (magazines, club dues, saltwater angling specific clothing and camping gear). Also, the expenditure survey collected a set of socioeconomic and demographic variables.

The switch to a mail survey in 2006 eliminated a number of concerns associated with collecting durable expenditure data over the telephone, as was done in the first round of angler expenditure surveys conducted by NMFS. These concerns included recall of detailed durable expenditures during a short telephone survey, the growing prevalence of cell phone only households, and falling response rates for telephone surveys in general. To compare how this change in methodology may have affected the results, both mail and telephone surveys were administered in the state of Florida. Results of the side-by-side comparisons are reported below.

The mail survey followed a four contact methodology outlined in Dillman (2000) for MRIP intercepted anglers, Hawaii Commercial Marine License (CML) holders, and Texas saltwater license holders. The mailing sequence for these anglers included a pre-notification letter, a survey and cover letter, a reminder postcard, and a final survey and cover letter mailing. Hawaii CML holders were sampled because a CML can be purchased by recreational fishermen so that catch can be sold. Also, while the MRIP is conducted in Hawaii, the survey samples at lower sampling rates than on the mainland, and due to the nature of shore access on many of the islands, shore mode anglers can be difficult to contact. To augment the sample in Hawaii, the CML data base was utilized as well as voluntary angler sign-ups through tackle shops and various fishery events attended by NMFS personnel.

Mail survey questions in Hawaii were designed so that anglers holding permits that allow fish sales could be post stratified as commercial fishermen, expense fishermen, or recreational fishermen based on their survey responses. These questions included whether or not catch was ever sold or whether the fishermen chartered their boat for paying customers. A recreational fisherman was defined as a fisherman that had not sold any fish nor chartered their boat during the previous 12 months. Additional questions were asked regarding the percentage of income earned from the sale of fish or vessel charters and this data was used to separate commercial from expense fishermen. Generally, this post stratification followed Hamilton and Huffman's (1997) work with the Hawaiian small boat fleet. Only fishermen that did not sell fish nor conducted any charters in the previous year are included in the expenditure estimates.

A modification to Dillman's (2000) four contact methodology was required for saltwater license holders in California, Oregon, Washington, and Alaska. Anglers in these states purchase a combined saltwater/freshwater fishing license so a fifth contact was necessary to exclude anglers that only fished in fresh water. In California, names and addresses for the mailing were collected via the California's Recreational Fisheries Survey (CRFS) existing telephone survey of licensed anglers. Details of their surveying methodology are available on the Pacific States Marine Fisheries Commission web site (PSMFC 2008). In all license frame states, the sampling was conducted on a wave basis to correspond to the intercept survey and in an effort to capture seasonality in trip expenditures.

Additional sample augmentation was required in California as well. Saltwater anglers are exempt from licensure when fishing from a man made structure such as a pier or a jetty and a significant amount of fishing effort takes place on the state's jetties and piers. As such, they would never be contacted through the CRFS. Additionally, for-hire anglers are contacted infrequently during the CRFS telephone survey, prompting the CRFS to conduct intercept interviews in both the man-made shore and for-hire modes. As a result, the intercept portion of the CRFS was used to collect additional sample for the mail survey by collecting the names and addresses of participants intercepted in the shore and for-hire fishing modes.

In Oregon, Washington, and Alaska a brief telephone screening survey was conducted. State license files were used for the dialing. Phone numbers were validated and missing phone numbers found using a private phone number look-up service. A maximum of ten attempts were made to contact anglers. If license holders took a saltwater fishing trip in the previous 12 months in the state of licensure, the respondent was deemed eligible to participate in the mail survey and mailing address details were verified.

In California, the actual sampling protocol was controlled by the Pacific States Marine Fisheries Commission (PSMFC, 2008). In all other license frame states, sample was randomly drawn, stratified by resident status, every two months from the most recent version of the entire license database without replacement. These samples were drawn proportionally to effort occurring during the same period for the previous year or the latest year that effort was estimated for the state. The target sampling intensity was 10% of the licensed saltwater anglers, but because sampling targets were formulated using the previous year's license frame and because Oregon, Washington, and Alaska required a prescreening survey, actual sampling rates varied from that target. Final wave sampling in all license frame states, besides California, was delayed until each state could provide their final and complete sample frame from 2006.

Survey versions were personalized based on the state of intercept or licensure, including framing of state specific questions and graphics. Otherwise, questions were identical for every intercept state. The license frame state versions were different from the intercept version only in that the trip expenditure questions were added to the mail survey in the license frame states (Appendix 3). In the license frame states, the trip expenditures were anchored to the most recent saltwater trip taken. All information collected through the MRIP intercept survey was collected in the license frame surveys in order to have similar data on the referent trip.

In total, 41,669 mail surveys were sent to anglers across the U.S. (Table 1). Approximately 9.0% of the surveys (3,758) were returned undeliverable, but almost 40% were completed and returned (16,317 surveys). Response rates were fairly consistent across states and generally favorable. One notable exception was Texas. In Texas, all licenses that allowed saltwater fishing were sampled. This included a large number of combination license holders (31.2%) that buy licenses that allow saltwater fishing along with freshwater fishing and/or hunting. A recent survey by Texas Parks and Wildlife Department indicates that only 55.1% of Super Combo and 43.5% of Senior Super Combo license holders actually fish in saltwater (Leitz 2007). It is likely that any Texas combination license holder that did not fish in saltwater would not return the survey, explaining the low response rate in that state. To further explore potential non-response bias, a telephone survey of 10% of all non-respondents was conducted and the results are detailed below.

METHODS

Angler Expenditures

The surveys obtained information on total expenditures made during the trip that might involve multiple days and multiple participants. Therefore, information about party size and trip duration was collected so that trip expenditures could be estimated as per person, per day expenditures.

Data for all intercepted survey participants and all mail survey participants contained the home zip code of the participant. Round trip travel distance between the participant's home zip code and the actual latitude and longitude of the intercept site or the county of their most recent trip, in the case of license frame states, was calculated. The American Automobile Association's 2006 average variable cost of operating a vehicle ($0.145/mile) was used to convert distance to private transportation expenditures. While all surveys asked the respondent to supply private transportation costs, missing values in the data set were replaced with the calculated value.

Respondents to expenditure surveys conducted through the mail often leave questions unanswered if no spending occurred for the item(s) of interest. This makes it difficult to determine whether the actual response should have been zero or the respondent skipped-over that portion of the survey. To avoid making assumptions about a respondent's intentions, screening questions were added to the survey for every grouping of expenditure categories. If a respondent answered the screening question in the affirmative for a particular group of expenditure items

(i.e., fishing tackle or gear), all subsequent missing responses for each of the individual expense items within that group were coded as zeros. For respondents that provided negative responses to the screening questions, all subsequent missing responses were coded as missing data.

All expenditure groupings included an “other” category allowing an open-ended response for expenditure type and amount. These verbatim responses were then re-coded and added into the appropriate expenditure categories.

Because all durable goods can be used for multiple activities, each expenditure grouping, or in some cases individual categories, included a question about the percent of time the goods purchased in the grouping or category were used for saltwater fishing. The percentage given was used to reduce the expenditure amount used for estimation. In the first round of expenditure surveys that NMFS conducted, respondents were instructed to provide expenditures only for those categories in which the goods purchased were used primarily for saltwater fishing. In order to stay consistent with this notion of primacy, if a respondent said the item was used less than 50% of the time for saltwater fishing, the expenditure amount was re-coded as a zero.

Intercept surveys designed to collect a random sample of trips, as in the MRIP, generally incur an avidity bias as more avid anglers have a higher likelihood of being sampled. If this avidity bias is present in the data it would not effect the estimation of anglers’ daily trip expenditures since the intercept selection probability employed by the MRIP is uniform across fishing trips. However, the avidity bias could effect the fishing equipment and durable expenditure estimates to the extent they are correlated with avidity. The last round of expenditure studies conducted by NMFS (Steinback and Gentner 2001; Gentner et al 2001; Gentner et al 2001a) used the MRIP intercept survey approach to sample anglers and a positive relationship between avidity and expenditures was found and corrected for with a weight developed by Thomson (1991). For this study, we did not test for this bias, but assumed that it exists for the fishing equipment and durable good expenditures since our sample of anglers originated from the MRIP intercept survey. The same weight developed by Thomson (1991) was used to correct for the avidity bias.

In addition to the avidity bias weight, another weight was developed in both the MRIP and license frame states to account for differences between expected and actual fishing effort in 2006. In the MRIP states, intercept sampling is based on quotas developed using expected fishing effort during a two-month sampling period (i.e., wave). Expected fishing effort is simply the effort estimate for the same two-month wave in the previous year. To ensure that the trip-level expenditure estimates are based upon the actual effort distributions that occurred in 2006, each expenditure data point in a particular stratum (i.e., state, mode, wave, residency status) was weighted by the proportion of total estimated effort in 2006 occurring in that stratum. The next section provides a narrative of the effort and participation estimates used in this study.

In all license frame states, a similar weight was used because sampling levels were based on quotas developed using expected license sales during the sampling period. Expected license sales by sampling period were predicted from 2005 license sales rates. Since both trip and durable good expenditures were collected from mail surveys sent to license holders, all expenditure data points were weighted by the number of anglers sampled in a stratum divided by the total saltwater license sales that occurred in that stratum in 2006.

Outliers were removed from the data set by strata (resident status and state of intercept/licensure) by expenditure category. The decision rule for outliers allowed strata with low variances to remain intact while strata with high variances had outliers removed. Initial weighted mean estimates for all expenditures categories were generated using the Proc Surveymeans procedure in SAS (SAS 2000) and any strata/category combination with a proportion of standard error (PSE) greater than 20% had the upper 1% of its distribution truncated.

Statistical tests were conducted to examine the potential effects of non-response bias and survey mode differences. Firstly, to examine potential differences between non-respondents and respondents, 10% of the mail survey non-respondents were re-contacted by telephone and asked about their demographic characteristics and their expenditures on fishing gear, fishing tackle, and fishing rods and reels. Secondly, the follow-up expenditure survey was conducted using a mail survey this time instead of a telephone survey, primarily to enhance the ability of the respondent to look up and provide an accounting of detailed annual expenditures. To test the impact of this decision, half of the anglers surveyed in Florida were mailed a follow-up expenditure survey and half were contacted by telephone using the same survey instrument. Results of these tests are shown below.

For policy purposes, only those expenditures that generate economic activity matter. Angler purchases of used goods from private parties do not generate any economic activity and are considered transfer payments from one household to another. Respondents were asked if expenditures on boats, vehicles, and second homes were made new or used, from dealers or private parties, or were financed. If a boat, vehicle, or home was purchased new the entire purchase price was used for estimation. If any of these items were purchased used from a private party and not financed, the expenditure was not included. If the purchase was financed, regardless of whether used or new, financed charges were assumed to be 2% of the loan principal. To calculate the loan principal and the 2006 interest payment to the banking sector, microdata from the Consumer Expenditure Survey (CES) were used to calculate the average loan term, the average principal balance, and the average interest rate (CES 2006). Amortization equations were used to develop the additional categories for each respondent purchasing a financed vehicle, boat, or second home. Additionally, for second homes, the average U.S. property tax was obtained from the National Association of Homebuilders (NAHB 2007). Real estate commissions from home purchases were assumed to be 6%.

Effort and Participation

Total trip expenditures were developed by multiplying mean trip expenditures by category by total annual effort in each stratum (state, mode, two-month period, and residency status), and total durable expenditures were developed by multiplying mean durable good expenditures by category by total annual participation in each stratum (state, two-month period, and residency status). The MRIP generates effort and participation estimates at the stratum-level so those estimates were used in the calculations for all East Coast and Gulf Coast states, excluding Texas where the MRIP survey is not conducted (Table's 2 and 3). For Texas, all three West Coast states, Hawaii, and Alaska, estimates of angler effort and participation are typically not produced at the stratum level so it was necessary to adjust the available data obtained from those states for this study. These adjustments are delineated below.

Effort

For Texas, survey data were used to estimate effort because the state of Texas does not produce annual effort estimates for all modes. The survey asked respondents to provide the number of trips taken in the last two months in each fishing mode and asked for the number of trips taken in the state of licensure in the previous year. The harmonic mean of 12-month avidity over the last year was calculated for Texas respondents by resident status. Harmonic means were expanded by the number of resident and non resident participants. Effort by mode in Texas was estimated by taking the weighted mean proportion of effort in each mode from the mail survey. The Texas effort estimates were vetted by the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department.

For the West Coast states, PSMFC estimates were used in this analysis (PSMFC 2008). However, the PSMFC estimates that were provided were not stratified by resident status so the data were adjusted so that we could distinguish between resident and non-resident effort. In California, the effort estimates were post-stratified by the weighted mean of avidity from residents and non-residents intercepted during the CRFS intercept survey. In Oregon and Washington, the resident/non-resident effort was post-stratified by the proportion of resident/non-resident license holders. This may be problematic as it assumes the trip taking profile of a resident is the same as that of a non-resident. However, no other data was available to make this stratification.

In Alaska, Alaska Department of Fish and Game effort estimates were used for this analysis (Jennings 2008). MRIP effort estimates were utilized for the private boat and shore modes in Hawaii, and the for-hire effort estimates were obtained from the NMFS Pacific Islands Regional Office (Harman 2007) since the MRIP does not provide estimates of effort for the for-hire mode in Hawaii.

Participation

Although the MRIP participation estimates were used when available, the MRIP non-resident participation estimates are not additive across states as it is impossible to know from MRIP data if a non-resident participant in one coastal state is resident or non-resident participant in another coastal state. Because of the inability to assess double counting in non-resident participation in each state, only resident participation was used to expand the means to the U.S. total expenditure estimate. This restriction likely results in an underestimate of U.S. participation and durable expenditures. For all license frames, participation estimates are considered lower bound estimates as each state has exemptions for various fishing types.

Texas has the following license exemptions: under 17 years of age; born before September 1, 1930; mentally disabled and participating in recreational fishing as part of a medically approved therapy supervised by hospital personnel; mentally retarded person under the direct supervision of a licensed angler; and veterans. Participation in Texas was estimated as the sum of saltwater licenses sold plus a proportion of combination licenses sold. Texas recently completed a survey of combination license holders and found that 55.1% of regular combo and 43.5% of senior combination license holders fished in saltwater. These proportions were used to reduce the number of saltwater participants across these categories. It was also assumed that these percentages also held for the resident and non-resident all-water and lifetime license holders.

Estimating participation in California was a real challenge. The only exemption in their license laws is for anglers fishing from man-made structures, but it is a large exemption. For licensed anglers in California, participation was simply estimated as the sum of resident and non-resident licenses sold. For unlicensed man-made mode anglers in California, participation was estimated by taking state total effort estimates in the man-made stratum and applying the harmonic mean of 12-month avidity in strata from the intercept survey. The actual field questionnaire asked each intercepted angler about 12-month avidity in the district of California where the angler was intercepted. Therefore this estimation strategy assumes that the intercepted angler fished only within the district where they were intercepted. This in district question was new to the 2006 man-made intercept form. In previous years, 12-month avidity was asked at the statewide level and a comparison of the harmonic mean showed that there was very little change in the mean avidity pre- and post questionnaire change. These participation estimates were vetted by the state of California (Ryan 2007).

Oregon's license frame does not separate fresh and saltwater anglers and contains the following exemptions: 14 and younger; Oregon landowners fishing from their own property; and fishing within three miles of shore between Cape Falcon, Oregon and Leadbetter Point, Washington either an Oregon or Washington license is valid. As a result, the estimates of participation presented here are considered lower bound estimates. Participation was estimated by taking the proportion of residents and non-residents reporting saltwater fishing activity during the last 12 months during the screener survey conducted as described above. Averaged across all six two-month waves, 75.5% of Oregon license holders had participated in saltwater fishing in the previous 12 months, but only 5.8% of all license holders were willing to participate in the mail survey.

Washington's license frame does not separate fresh and saltwater anglers and contains the following exemptions: 14 and younger; and fishing within three miles of shore between Cape Falcon, Oregon and Leadbetter Point, Washington either an Oregon or Washington license is valid. Therefore, the estimates of participation presented here are again considered lower bound estimates. Participation was estimated by taking the proportion of residents and non-residents reporting saltwater fishing activity during the last 12 months during the screener survey conducted as described above. Averaged across all six two-month waves 84.0% of Washington license holders had participated in saltwater fishing in the previous 12 months, but only 15.0% of all license holders were willing to participate in the mail survey.

Finally, Alaskan participation was provided by the Alaska Department of Fish and Game (Jennings 2007). While Alaska provided saltwater participation estimates, a screener was still necessary to contact saltwater anglers. Averaged across all six two-month waves 93.5% of Alaska license holders had participated in saltwater fishing in the previous 12 months, but only 2.42% of all license holders were willing to participate in the mail survey.

For the remainder of this report, U.S. total participation (15.5 million) includes only resident participants to avoid potential double counting of non-resident participants. As a result, the U.S. total used here likely underestimates total participation in 2006. The actual number of saltwater fishing participants in 2006 in the U.S. is estimated to range between 15.5 million anglers (the summation of all state resident participants) and 24.7 million anglers (the summation of all state resident and non-resident participants).

Economic Impacts

In addition to quantifying angler expenditures within each coastal state and the U.S. as a whole, the second exercise carried out for this study was a regional input-output assessment that examined how those expenditures circulated through each state's economy as well as the economy of the entire U.S. The economic contribution or impact of saltwater sportfishing extends well beyond simply measuring angler expenditures. Angler expenditures provide considerable income and employment in a wide range of manufacturing, transportation, and service sectors. The effects of these expenditures can be classified as: (1) direct, (2) indirect, or (3) induced. Direct effects occur when anglers spend money at retail and service oriented fishing businesses. Indirect effects occur when retail and service sectors purchase fishing supplies from wholesale trade businesses and manufacturers, and pay operating expenditures. These secondary industries, in turn, purchase additional supplies and this cycle of industry to industry purchasing continues until all indirect effects are derived from outside the region of interest (Steinback, Gentner, and Castle 2004). Payments for goods and services produced outside of the study area (i.e., outside state lines) are excluded because these effects impact businesses located in other regions. Induced effects occur when employees in the direct and indirect sectors make purchases from retailers and service establishments in the normal course of household consumption. The summation of the direct, indirect, and induced multiplier effects represent the total economic contributions or impacts generated from saltwater sportfishing expenditures to the overall regional economy. In this study, we provide total impact estimates for sales, value-added, income, employment, and taxes for each coastal state in the U.S. including aggregate estimates for the entire U.S.

Input-output modeling is an approach used to describe the structure and interactions of businesses in a regional economy. Input-output models are capable of tracking quantities and purchasing locations of expenditures by anglers, support businesses, and employees in both direct and indirectly affected industries. For a comprehensive description of the strengths and weaknesses of the input-output modeling technique see Miller and Blair (1985).

In the analyses presented here, a ready-made regional input-output system called IMPLAN Pro (Minnesota IMPLAN Group, Inc. 1997) was employed to estimate the economic contribution of marine recreational fishing to each coastal state in the US. The IMPLAN Pro system is a widely used, nationally recognized tool, providing detailed purchasing information for 509 industrial sectors.

State-level multiplier effects attributed to anglers' expenditures were estimated by multiplying the total value of each of the individual expense items (see Table 4 for list of items) that is spent within a particular state by the corresponding IMPLAN-generated multiplier. The IMPLAN Pro multipliers measure the total state-level sales, income, value-added, and employment change in each economic sector caused by a $1 change in output in any particular sector. Therefore, the product of the expenditure values that are spent within a particular state with their matching IMPLAN-generated multiplier provides an estimate of the contribution of each particular expenditure item to the state economy.

Angler expenditures were allocated to IMPLAN sectors based on the sectoring scheme shown in Table 4. Expenditure categories that included more than one IMPLAN sector were not aggregated to avoid the biases associated with aggregating. Instead, the expenditure in the category was distributed to individual IMPLAN sectors based on the proportion of final demand in each sector in each state. While the survey asked for total grocery expenditures, the typical grocery or convenience store purchase includes a wide range of products. To allocate generic grocery expenditures to more accurately reflect the mix of products purchased, the Personal Consumption Expenditure (PCE) activity data base for grocery store purchases contained in IMPLAN was used. PCE activity data bases are created by the Bureau of Economic Analysis and represent national average expenditure patterns.

In IMPLAN, margins are used to convert the retail-level prices paid by anglers into appropriate producer values. Margins ensure that correct values are assigned to products as they move from producers, to wholesalers, through the transportation sectors, and finally on to retail establishments. Regional purchase coefficients (RPCs) reflect the proportion of a retail item that is manufactured within the state or region. RPCs were applied to the retail expenditure estimates to insure that imported goods were not included in the impact estimates.

The resident status stratification is carried through to the impact analysis. Spending by residents on marine recreational fishing generally affects the amount of money available to be spent on other leisure-related activities within a state. A decrease in resident angler expenditures may shift disposable income to other leisure sectors resulting in little overall net change to sales, value-added, income, employment, and taxes within a state. However, even though the overall net change may approach zero, resident angling expenditures support jobs that might not otherwise exist. On the other hand, non-resident angling expenditures contribute to an overall net increase in economic impacts. To address these differences, separate input-output models were constructed for residents and non-residents. Multipliers in the non-resident model are estimated using the base state data in IMPLAN. To avoid double counting of resident expenditures, a separate model was constructed and the total value of resident expenditures was removed from the final demand in each state before the multipliers were generated.

State-level impacts were estimated for sales, value-added, income, employment, and taxes. Sales reflect total dollar sales generated from expenditures by anglers in each state. Value-added represents the contribution recreational angling makes to gross domestic product. Income represents wages, salaries, benefits, and proprietary income generated from angler expenditures. Employment includes both full-time and part-time workers and is expressed as total jobs. Finally, taxes denote the income received by federal and state/local governments.

RESULTS

Anglers' expenditures and the economic impacts of those expenditures on each coastal state's economy are discussed in five separate regional sections: the Northeast, Southeast, Pacific Coast, North Pacific, and Hawaii. A sixth section shows the expenditure and impact results for the entire U.S. In each regional section, expenditures and impacts are shown by state and aggregate impacts across regions are provided in the U.S. section. Nine tables of results are shown for each state. The first table shows mean expenditures and standard errors by mode and resident status. The second table shows total expenditures by mode and resident status, as well as 95% confidence intervals for the expenditure estimates. The third table summarizes the total economic impacts attributable to recreational fishing by resident status displaying the direct, indirect, and induced impacts on sales, value-added, income, and employment for resident and non-resident anglers.

Tables four through seven in each state separately detail the impacts on sales, value-added, income, and employment respectively by individual expenditure category. The eighth table displays the total economic impacts generated from saltwater fishing trip expenditures by fishing mode and resident status. This table excludes the impacts of fishing equipment purchases and other durable items that could be used for multiple trips since these could not be linked to a particular mode of fishing. The final table for each state shows the estimated revenue received by federal and state/local governments from angler purchases. The tax revenue estimates are based on data available in IMPLAN's social accounting matrix, which tracks monetary flows between industries and institutions such as households, government, investment, and trade. The rows of the table depict the types of tax payments and the institutions that receive them, while the columns represent the different institutions making each type of tax payment. Employee compensation, enterprise, and indirect business taxes are paid by businesses, while taxes on proprietary income and household expenditures are paid by individuals.

Northeast Region

Expenditures

Daily mean trip expenditures were generally higher for non-residents than residents in all of the coastal states in the Northeast (1st Table for each state). Non-resident anglers tended to travel further and were more inclined to take overnight fishing trips, requiring the use of lodging facilities. Resident anglers in New Hampshire fishing aboard for-hire boats and resident anglers in Connecticut, New Hampshire, and New York fishing from private or rental boats were the only groups of resident anglers to incur higher mean trip expenditures than their non-resident counterparts. The highest single mean trip expense for resident anglers in all of the Northeast coastal states was charter fees. The highest mean trip expense for non-residents was also charter fees in every state except in Maryland and Massachusetts where mean lodging fees exceeded all other trip expenditures.

In contrast to daily trip expenditures, resident anglers in every state but one (Maine) spent considerably more on fishing equipment and durable items in 2006, per angler, than out-of-state anglers. The largest difference in durable expenditures across the two groups of anglers was for boat related purchases. Residents tended to spend significantly more, per angler, on boat purchases, boat accessories, and boat storage in all of the Northeast states except in Maine. Non-resident anglers fishing in Maine were estimated to spend more for boats and boating related items in Maine, on average, than residents of Maine.

Total resident expenditures on trip-related items exceeded the amount spent by non-residents in 6 of the 10 Northeast coastal states (CT, MD, NH, NJ, NY, and VA), even though mean daily expenses in those states were generally higher for non-residents (2nd Table for each state). This occurred because residents of those six states fished many more days than non-residents in 2006. Resident anglers in the remaining four Northeast states (DE, ME, MA, and RI) also fished more days than non-residents, but mean daily resident expenditures were considerably lower so total non-resident trip expenditures exceeded resident expenditures in those states.

In terms of total expenditures on fishing equipment and durable goods in 2006, resident anglers spent more than non-residents in 8 of the 10 Northeast coastal states. Non-residents fishing in Maine and Rhode Island spent more, in total, than their resident counterparts due mainly to higher boating and fishing vehicle expenditures in those states.

Across all of the Northeast coastal states, anglers fishing in New Jersey, Maryland, Virginia, Massachusetts, and New York exhibited the highest total expenditures in 2006 (i.e., the sum of trip, fishing equipment, and durable good purchases). Anglers fishing in these states spent between $769 million and $1.4 billion on marine recreational fishing in 2006. Total resident expenditures exceeded the amount spent by non-residents in all of the Northeast states except in Maine and Rhode Island.

Economic Impacts

Overall, the highest sales, value-added, income, and employment impacts were generated by angler expenditures in New Jersey (Table 63). The $1.4 billion spent on retail good and services by anglers in New Jersey in 2006 generated $1.6 billion in total sales within the state, $830 million in value-added, $523 million in income, and supported 9,814 jobs. New Jersey was followed by Maryland, New York, Massachusetts, and Virginia in generating sales, value-added, income, and employment.

A substantial portion of the items purchased by anglers, however, was imported into each state. As a result, many of the angler dollars spent in each coastal state impacted the economies of other states and countries. The amount lost to other regions can be calculated from the difference between the total expenditures and the direct sales impacts in the third and fourth table for each state. For instance, of the $1.4 billion spent by anglers on all goods and services in New Jersey, only $951 million (68%) directly affected the New Jersey economy (Table 63); $441.5 million in goods and services were imported into the state in response to angler demands. Thus, on average, about 32 cents of every dollar spent by anglers in New Jersey leaves the state. This is the lowest level of import requirements for any Northeast coastal state. Across all Northeast coastal states, the level of import requirements ranged from a low of 32 cents for every angler dollar spent in New Jersey to a high of 45 cents in Virginia.

Resident impacts were higher than those of non-residents in all of the Northeast coastal states except in Maine, Rhode Island, and Delaware. In Maine and Rhode Island, expenditures by non-residents generated the highest sales, value-added, income, and employment impacts (Tables 27 and 81). In Delaware, resident expenditures generated the highest sales, value-added, and income impacts, but non-resident expenditures generated about 40 more jobs than resident expenditures (Table 18). This is mostly due to the nature of non-resident expenditures in Delaware. Non-resident anglers in Delaware spent a substantial amount of money at restaurants, for groceries, charter fees, and for overnight lodging at hotels. The businesses that support these expenditures are highly labor intensive which translates into considerable employment impacts within the state of Delaware.

The most important expense categories in terms of generating impacts varied considerably by state (4th, 5th, 6th, and 7th tables shown for each state). The highest sales impacts were generated by purchases of used vehicles (CT), new vehicles (DE), lodging fees (ME and MA), new homes (MD), rods and reels (NH and RI), boat storage fees (NJ and NY), and new boats (VA). The highest value-added impacts were generated by the same expenditure categories in all of the Northeast states, except in New Hampshire and Rhode Island, where charter fees and private transportation costs produced more value-added effects. Additionally, the same expenditure categories that generated the highest sales impacts in each Northeast coastal state also created the highest income impacts in each state, except in New York, where second home maintenance costs produced the greatest income impacts. Lastly, in terms of total state-level employment generated from angler purchases, the most important expense categories were used vehicles (CT), food from restaurants (DE and RI), lodging fees (ME and MA), new homes (MD), charter fees (NH), rods and reels (NJ), second home maintenance (NY), and new boats (VA).

The impacts created by anglers fishing from private boats and from the shore were higher than those produced by party/charter boat fishing in all of the coastal states except New Hampshire (8th table shown for each state). In Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts and Rhode Island, shore mode impacts were higher than the private/rental boat mode. The sales, income, value-added, and employment impacts created by party/charter boat fishing and private/rental boat fishing were the highest in New Jersey, while the impacts generated from shore fishing were the highest in Massachusetts. Overall, angler trip expenditures in New Jersey generated more sales, income, value-added, and employment impacts than any other coastal state.

Federal taxes generated by angler purchases ranged from $5 million in New Hampshire to $141 million in New Jersey (9th table shown for each state). Revenue received by state/local governments varied from $3 million in New Hampshire to a high of $100 million in New Jersey. In total, angler expenditures in New Jersey generated the highest tax revenues of all the coastal states ($242 million).

Southeast Region

Expenditures

Daily mean trip expenditures were generally higher for non-residents than residents in all of the Southeast coastal states (1st table shown for each state). Non-resident anglers tended to travel further and were more inclined to take overnight fishing trips, requiring the use of lodging facilities. Resident anglers in Georgia fishing aboard for-hire boats, resident anglers in Georgia and Mississippi fishing from private/rental boats, and resident anglers in Louisiana fishing from shore were the only groups of resident anglers to incur higher mean trip expenditures than their non-resident counterparts. The highest single mean trip expense for resident anglers in all of the Southeast coastal states was charter fees. The highest mean trip expense for non-residents was also charter fees in every state except in South Carolina and Georgia where mean lodging fees and private transportation costs, respectively, exceeded all other trip expenditures.

In contrast to average daily trip expenditures, resident anglers in every state spent considerably more on fishing equipment and durable items in 2006, per angler, than out-of-state anglers. The largest difference in durable expenditures across the two groups of anglers was generally for boat-related purchases. Residents tended to spend significantly more, per angler, on boat purchases, boat accessories, and boat storage in all of the Southeast states.

Total resident expenditures on trip-related items exceeded the amount spent by non-residents in 4 of the 8 Southeast coastal states (GA, LA, MS, and TX), even though mean daily expenses in those states were generally higher for non-residents (2nd table shown for each state). This occurred because residents of those four states fished many more days than non-residents in 2006. Resident anglers in the remaining four Southeast states (AL, FL, NC, and SC) also fished more days than non-residents, but mean daily resident expenditures were considerably lower so total non-resident trip expenditures exceeded resident expenditures in those states. In terms of total expenditures for fishing equipment and durable goods in 2006, resident anglers spent more than non-residents in all of the Southeast coastal states.

Across all of the Southeast coastal states, anglers fishing in Florida, Texas, Louisiana, and North Carolina exhibited the highest total expenditures in 2006 (i.e., the sum of trip, fishing equipment, and durable good purchases). Anglers fishing in those states spent between $2.0 billion and $16.7 billion on marine recreational fishing in 2006. Total resident expenditures exceeded the amount spent by non-residents in all of the Southeast states.

Economic Impacts

Overall, the highest sales, value-added, income, and employment impacts were generated by angler expenditures in Florida (Table 125). The $16.7 billion spent on retail good and services by anglers in Florida in 2006 generated $14.2 billion in total sales that remained within the state, $7.6 billion in value-added, $2.1 billion in income, and supported 55,643 jobs. Florida was followed by Texas, North Carolina, and Louisiana in generating sales, value-added, income, and employment.

A substantial portion of the items purchased by anglers, however, was imported into each state. As a result, many of the angler dollars spent in each coastal state impacted the economies of other states and countries. The amount lost to other regions can be calculated from the difference between the total expenditures and the direct sales impacts in the third and fourth table for each state. For instance, of the $3.2 billion spent by anglers on all goods and services in Texas, about $2.3 billion (72%) directly affected the Texas economy (Table 179); $887.4 million in goods and services were imported into the state in response to angler demands. Thus, on average, about 28 cents of every dollar spent by anglers in Texas leaves the state. This is the lowest level of import requirements for any Southeast coastal state. Across all Southeast coastal states, the level of import requirements ranged from a low of 28 cents for every angler dollar spent in Texas to a high of 52 cents in Florida.

Resident impacts were higher than those of non-residents in all of the Southeast coastal states except in North Carolina (3rd table shown for each state). In North Carolina, expenditures by non-residents generated the highest sales, value-added, income, and employment impacts even though resident expenditures were approximately $66.4 million higher than non-residents (Table 161). This is because non-resident anglers in North Carolina spent considerably more than residents at service-oriented businesses within the state, such as restaurants, supermarkets, convenience stores, hotels, and for-hire fishing boats. Service-oriented businesses tend to generate higher economic impacts within a region than commodity-level purchases (i.e., fishing tackle purchases) because the entire demand for the services is supplied by local businesses. Whereas, commodity-level purchases usually require some level of imports to meet consumer demand. For instance, in North Carolina, of the $86.4 million spent by anglers on fishing tackle in 2006, only about $46.9 million was supplied by manufacturers within the state (Table 161). Approximately $39.5 (46%) million was imported into the state to meet angler demands.

The most important expense categories in terms of generating impacts varied somewhat by state (4th, 5th, 6th, and 7th tables shown for each state). The highest sales impacts were generated by purchases of new boats (AL, FL, LA, and SC), boat storage (GA), vehicle maintenance (MS), and new homes (NC and TX). The highest value-added impacts were generated by the same expenditure categories in all of the Southeast states, except in Georgia and North Carolina, where new boat purchases and lodging costs produced more value-added effects. Additionally, the same expenditure categories that generated the highest sales impacts in each Southeast coastal state also created the highest income impacts in each state, except in Georgia, where new boat purchases produced the greatest income impacts. Lastly, in terms of total state-level employment generated from angler purchases, the most important expense categories were new boats (AL, FL, GA, LA, and SC), vehicle maintenance (MS), lodging fees (NC), and new homes (TX).

The impacts created by anglers fishing from private boats and from the shore were higher than those produced by party/charter boat fishing in all of the coastal states (8th table shown for each state). In South Carolina, North Carolina, and Alabama shore mode impacts were higher than private/rental boat mode. The sales, income, and employment impacts created by party/charter boat fishing and private/rental boat fishing were the highest in Florida, while the impacts generated from shore fishing were the highest in North Carolina. Overall, angler trip expenditures in Florida generated more sales, income, and employment impacts than any other coastal state.

Federal taxes generated by angler purchases ranged from $15 million in Georgia to $1.2 billion in Florida (9th table shown for each state). Revenue received by state/local governments varied from $11 million in Georgia to a high of $867 million in Florida. In total, angler expenditures in Florida generated the highest tax revenues of all the coastal states ($2.1 billion).

Pacific Coast and North Pacific Regions

Expenditures

Daily mean trip expenditures were generally higher for non-residents than residents in the Pacific and North Pacific coastal states (1st table shown for each state). Non-resident anglers tended to have higher travel expenses and were more inclined to take overnight fishing trips, requiring the use of lodging facilities. However, resident anglers in California fishing from private/rental boats, resident anglers in Washington fishing aboard party/charter boats, and shore anglers residing in California and Oregon incurred higher mean trip expenditures than their non-resident counterparts. The highest single mean trip expense for resident anglers in all of the Pacific coastal states was charter fees. The highest mean trip expense for non-residents fishing in the Pacific states was also charter fees.

In terms of average expenditures on fishing equipment and durable items in 2006, non-residents spent more per angler in California and Oregon, and residents of Washington and Alaska spent considerably more on average than their non-resident counterparts. In California, maintenance costs for second homes was the primary driver behind higher average non-resident expenditures, and in Oregon the difference was mainly due to higher average expenditures for new vehicles purchased for fishing. In Washington and Alaska, where average resident expenditures were a great deal larger than non-resident outlays, the largest differences in average expenditures across the two groups of anglers was for new boats and vehicles.

Total resident expenditures on trip-related items exceeded the amount spent by non-residents in 3 of the 4 Pacific and North Pacific coastal states (CA, OR, and WA), even though mean daily expenses were generally higher for non-residents in those states, except in California (2nd Table for each state). This occurred because residents of those three states fished many more days than non-residents in 2006. In Alaska, non-resident anglers fished nearly as many days as resident anglers in 2006, and since their mean daily expenditures were so much higher total non-resident trip expenditures exceeded resident expenditures in Alaska.

In terms of total expenditures on fishing equipment and durable goods in 2006, resident anglers spent more than non-residents in all of the Pacific and North Pacific coastal states even though average expenditures, per angler, were higher for non-residents in California and Oregon. This occurred because resident participation was higher than non-resident participation in California and Oregon in 2006.

Across all of the Pacific and North Pacific coastal states, anglers fishing in California exhibited the highest total expenditures in 2006 (i.e., the sum of trip, fishing equipment, and durable good purchases). Anglers fishing in California spent an estimated $3.0 billion on marine recreational fishing in 2006 (Table 196). Total resident expenditures exceeded the amount spent by non-residents in all of the Pacific and North Pacific coastal states except in Alaska.

Economic Impacts

Overall, the highest sales, value-added, income, and employment impacts were generated by angler expenditures in California (Table 188). The $3.0 billion spent on retail good and services by anglers in California in 2006 generated $3.7 billion in total sales within the state, $1.9 billion in value-added, $1.3 billion in income, and supported 23,454 jobs. California was followed by Washington, Alaska, and Oregon in generating sales, value-added, income, and employment.

A substantial portion of the items purchased by anglers, however, was imported into each state. As a result, many of the angler dollars spent in each coastal state impacted the economies of other states and countries. The amount lost to other regions can be calculated from the difference between the total expenditures and the direct sales impacts in the third and fourth table for each state. For instance, of the $3.0 billion spent by anglers on all goods and services in California, only $2.0 billion (67%) directly affected the California economy (Table 188); $1.0 billion in goods and services were imported into the state in response to angler demands. Thus, on average, about 33 cents of every dollar spent by anglers in California leaves the state. This is the lowest level of import requirements for any Pacific coastal state. Across all Pacific and North Pacific coastal states, the level of import requirements ranged from a low of 33 cents for every angler dollar spent in California to a high of 51 cents in Washington.

Resident impacts were higher than those of non-residents in all of the Pacific and North Pacific coastal states except in Alaska (3rd table shown for each state). In Alaska, expenditures by non-residents generated the highest sales, value-added, income, and employment impacts (Table 215).

The most important expense categories in terms of generating impacts varied across each state (4th, 5th, 6th, and 7th tables shown for each state). The highest sales impacts were generated from charter fees (AK), rods and reels (CA), new vehicles (OR), and new boats (WA). The highest value-added impacts were generated by the same expenditure categories in Alaska and Washington. In California, boat insurance generated the highest value-added impacts, and in Oregon license fees produced the single highest value-added impacts. The highest income impacts were generated by license fees (AK and OR), rods and reels (CA), and new boats (WA). Lastly, in terms of total state-level employment generated from angler purchases, the most important expense categories were charter fees (AK), rods and reels (CA), license fees (OR), and new boats (WA).

The impacts created by anglers fishing from party/charter boats were higher than those produced by anglers fishing from the shore or from private/rental boats in Alaska and California (Tables 220 and 193). Private/rental boat fishing generated more impacts in Oregon than the other two modes of fishing and, in Washington, anglers fishing from the shore generated the highest level of impacts (Tables 202 and 211). The sales, income, value-added, and employment impacts created by party/charter boat fishing were the highest in Alaska, while the sales, value-added, and income impacts from private/rental boat fishing were the highest in California. Anglers fishing from private/rental boats in Alaska generated more employment than the other three Pacific and North Pacific coastal states. As for shore fishing effects, angler expenditures in California produced the highest sales, value-added, income, and employment impacts in the Pacific. Overall, angler trip expenditures in California generated more sales, income, and value-added impacts than the other coastal states, and the highest employment effects occurred in Alaska.

Federal taxes generated by angler purchases ranged from $24 million in Oregon to $317 million in California (9th table shown for each state). Revenue received by state/local governments varied from $17 million in Oregon to a high of $216 million in California. In total, angler expenditures in California generated the highest tax revenues of all the coastal states ($534 million).

Hawaii

Expenditures

Daily mean trip expenditures were much higher for non-residents visiting Hawaii than for residents (Table 222). Non-resident anglers tended to travel further, use more public transportation, and were more inclined to require the use of lodging facilities. The highest single mean trip expense for resident anglers was boat fuel and the highest mean trip expense for non-residents was charter fees. Non-residents also spent a considerable amount on gifts and souvenirs, per angler, in Hawaii.

In contrast to anglers' expenditures in most other coastal states in the U.S., non-residents fishing in Hawaii spent more on fishing equipment and durable items in 2006, per angler, than residents. This is mainly due to higher average non-resident expenditures for license fees, camping equipment, boat accessories, and vehicle maintenance. Residents of Hawaii spent more, on average, for rods and reels, new vehicle purchases, and new home purchases.

Total resident expenditures on trip-related items exceeded the amount spent by non-residents in Hawaii, even though mean daily expenses were considerably higher for non-residents (Table 223). This occurred because residents of Hawaii fished many more days than non-residents in 2006. In terms of total expenditures on fishing equipment and durable goods in 2006, non-resident anglers spent more than residents of Hawaii. The sum of the trip, fishing equipment, and durable good purchases in Hawaii in 2006 equaled $755.9 million.

Economic Impacts

The $755.9 million spent on retail good and services by anglers in Hawaii in 2006 generated $772.8 million in total sales within the state, $380.6 million in value-added, $253.6 million in income, and supported 7,023 jobs (Table 224).

A substantial portion of the items purchased by anglers, however, was imported into Hawaii. As a result, many of the angler dollars spent in Hawaii impacted the economies of other states and countries. The amount lost to other regions can be calculated from the difference between the total expenditures and the direct sales impacts in Tables 224 and 225. For example, of the $755.9 million spent by anglers on all goods and services in Hawaii, only $475.5 million (63%) directly affected the Hawaii economy; $280.3 million in goods and services were imported into the state in response to angler demands. Thus, on average, about 37 cents of every dollar spent by anglers in Hawaii leaves the state.

The economic impacts generated by resident and non-resident anglers in Hawaii were similar across the two groups of anglers in 2006. Expenditures by out-of-state anglers generated slightly more value-added, income, and employment in Hawaii than resident anglers in 2006, while resident expenditures generated more sales than non-resident outlays (Table 224).

The most important expense categories in terms of generating impacts were vehicle maintenance and rods and reels (Tables 225-228). The highest sales impacts were generated by purchases of rods and reels, and the highest value-added, income, and employment effects were created from expenditures for vehicle maintenance.

The impacts created by anglers fishing from shore were higher than those produced by party/charter boat fishing or private/rental fishing (Table 229). Lastly, Federal taxes generated by angler purchases amounted to $56.2 million and the revenue received by state/local governments was $48.6 million in 2006 (Table 230). In total, angler expenditures in Hawaii generated $105.0 million in tax revenue in 2006.

U.S.

Expenditures

U.S. total expenditures, including trip and durable good expenditures were $31.4 billion in 2006 (Table 231). Trip expenditures accounted for $5.8 billion and durable good purchases made up $25.6 billion of that total. The single largest trip expenditure in the U.S. was private transportation expenses at $1.2 billion (Table 231). The single largest durable equipment expenditure was new boat purchases at $6.8 billion.

The top five coastal states in terms of total expenditures were: Florida ($16.7 billion), Texas ($3.2 billion), California ($3.0 billion), Louisiana ($2.9 billion), and North Carolina ($2.0 billion). As with the U.S. totals, durable good purchases drive the state totals as well. The top five coastal states in terms of durable good expenditures were: Florida ($15.4 billion), California ($2.7 billion), Louisiana ($2.6 billion), Texas ($2.3 billion), and North Carolina ($1.3 billion).

The highest total trip expenditures were found in Florida ($1.3 billion), Texas ($915 million), North Carolina ($709 million), New Jersey ($358 million), and California ($334 million).

Economic Impacts

Saltwater angler expenditures in the U.S. generated $82.3 billion in total sales, $38 billion in value-added, $24.0 billion in income, and supported 533,813 jobs (Table 232). Durable expenditures generated $68.7 billion in total sales, $31 billion in value-added, $19.9 billion in income, and supported 425,217 jobs (Tables 233-236). Trip expenditures in the U.S. produced $13.6 billion in total sales, $7.1 billion in value-added, $4.1 billion in income, and supported 108,596 jobs. To place the study results in context relative to the total income and employment generated in the U.S. in 2006, marine recreational fishing expenditures accounted for less than 0.5% of the total sales, 0.3% of total employment, 0.3% of total income, and 0.4% of total value-added existing in the nation.

Overall, U.S. fishermen spent over $31 billion, but only about $28 million remained in the country (89%); $3.4 million in goods and services were imported into the U.S. in response to angler demands (Table 232). The most important durable good purchase, in terms of economic impacts generated in the country, was new boats (Tables 233-236). The most important trip impact category was private transportation (i.e., auto fuel). Lodging expenses also generated substantial economic impacts across the country.

Shore mode fishing in the U.S. generated the highest total sales, value-added, income, and employment followed by private/rental boaters and anglers fishing aboard party/charter boats (Table 237). Approximately $6.0 billion in federal taxes and about $4.0 billion in total state taxes was generated from saltwater angler expenditures in the U.S. in 2006 (Table 238).

Statistical Tests

Non-Response

To examine statistical differences between respondents and non-respondents, the demographic characteristics, fishing expenditures, and avidity of the mail survey participants were compared to the non-respondents that were successfully re-contacted by telephone. Differences in the continuous variables between respondents and non-respondents were tested using a Wald test in the Proc Surveyreg procedure in SAS (SAS 2000). For categorical variables both the Rao-Scott and Wald chi-squared tests were used in the Proc Surveyfreq procedure in SAS (SAS 2000). These procedures and tests were selected because they can be applied to weighted data, as was used in this study. The null hypothesis for the tests was no difference in means across the treatment variables.

No significant differences in means were found for the three expenditure categories that were compared across respondents and non-respondents (Table 5). The tests were generally inconclusive across the demographic variables. No significant differences were found for age, ethnicity (under both the Rao-Scott and Wald test), gender (under both tests), and employment (under the Wald test). However, the null hypothesis of no difference in means between respondents and non-respondents was rejected for the variables education, income, and race under both the Rao-Scott and Wald test. The null hypothesis was also rejected for employment when using the Rao-Scott test and for 12-month avidity. It is difficult to draw much insight into these differences for a number of reasons. Language barriers may have limited minority participation in the non-response telephone survey since it was conducted only in English. Results indicate that fewer races besides white were represented among those that completed the non-response telephone survey. Race, education, and income also tend to be correlated so this may have introduced bias into the non-response telephone survey results. Further, in contrast to our expectations, participants in the mail survey had a mean 12-month avidity of 1.92 trips while the non-response telephone survey participants had a mean 12-month avidity of 4.95 trips. We expected that more avid anglers would generally be more likely to respond to the initial mail survey. In the end, because all of the durable expenditure responses that we tested were not statistically different, no additional weighting was undertaken.

Survey Mode Differences

Statistical differences between expenditures and demographics collected through the mail versus those collected over the telephone in Florida were examined using the same Rao-Scott and Wald chi-squared tests described above. Of the 30 expenditure and demographic variables tested, 21 failed to reject the null of no significant difference in means with the results the same regardless of the categorical variable test used (Table 6). The expenditure categories found to be significantly different included: fishing gear (higher on phone), second home insurance (lower on phone), second home repair (lower on phone), vehicle purchase (higher on phone), and binocular purchase (higher on phone). For the demographic variables, 12-month avidity (lower on phone), education (higher on phone), ethnicity (Hispanic sample low on phone), and race (almost no non-white sample on phone) were statistically different.

While the test results showed no significant difference in means for the majority of the expenditure and demographic variables, the results are not definitive. Statistical difference tests perform more accurately with comparable sample sizes. While the mail survey in Florida met with a 53.4% success rate, the telephone survey met with a 5.1% success rate primarily due to bad telephone numbers collected during the intercept phase or initial refusal of the telephone number question during the field portion of the survey. A phone number look-up survey was used but little success was met. Interestingly, respondents were far more likely to supply a working mailing address. The resulting disparate sample sizes may have had an influence on the outcome of the statistical significance tests. The same holds true for the race variable where, as expected, the proportion of non-whites in the telephone sample was considerably lower than that contained in the mail survey sample.

DISCUSSION

Overall, total U.S. expenditures in 2006 have increased 79% compared to the inflation adjusted estimates shown in Steinback, Gentner, and Castle (2004) for the U.S. in 2000.<sup>1</sup> Further comparisons show an inflation adjusted increase in total U.S. trip expenditures of 36% and a 93% increase in total durable expenditures from 2000 to 2006. Although these increases seem inordinately large on the surface, the majority of the differences can be traced to a rise in angler effort and participation in the U.S. during this six year time period. According to MRIP estimates, effort increased 79% from 2000 to 2006 and participation increased 41% during this time period in the U.S. Thus, although total trip expenditures increased by 36%, effort rose by 79%, suggesting that mean expenditures per trip, at the U.S. level, actually declined from 2000 to 2006. Durable expenditures, on the other hand, were up 93% nationwide while participation only increased 41%. However, angler expenditures in Texas, Alaska, and Hawaii were not included in the expenditure estimates provided in Steinback, Gentner, and Castle (2004). If the comparison is made only across states included in both studies, the inflation adjusted increase in durable expenditures was 21%, less than the increase in participation from 2000 to 2006.

Another reason for the increase in total angler expenditures is that spending on durable goods has risen faster than inflation nationwide during this same period. The most recent data from the Bureau of Labor Statistic's Consumer Expenditure Survey (CES) shows expenditures on other transportation, which includes boats, increased 26% from 2000-2006 (CES 2006). Vehicle purchases remained level, but home expenditures rose 36%, mortgage balances increased 42%, and home values were up 98%. The later two statistics imply that homeowners were borrowing money from their homes to spend in the marketplace. Also, according to the National Marine Manufacturer's Association (NMMA) boat sales have increased 31% since 2000 (NMMA 2007). The NMMA estimated that sales of the three most popular fishing boats, outboard boats, sterndrive boats, and inboards increased 39%, 21%, and 5%, respectively, from 2000-2006. Total sales of these boats in 2006 (both new and used) was estimated to be $19.1 billion, a 4% increase over 2005. Adding canoe and kayak purchases increases this total to $19.3 billion. Total boat purchases in the U.S. in 2006, including new, used, and canoe and kayak purchases, was estimated to be $6.9 billion. Purchases of boat accessories were estimated to have doubled in the last nine years, according to the NMMA, and reached $2.8 billion in 2006. The estimated value of boat accessories purchased by U.S. anglers in this report is $834 million. Overall, the estimated increase in angler expenditures from 2000-2006 seems to compare favorably with the NMMA findings.

A number of additional durable expenditure categories were added to the survey in 2006 as well. Instead of lumping tackle and other fishing gear into one category as was done in the 2000 survey ($635 million in 2006 dollars), it was split into two categories for the 2006 survey ($1.5 billion in combined expenditures). In the 2000 survey there was only one category for boat expenses with a total of $3.8 billion spent nationwide in 2006 dollars after adjusting for inflation. For the 2006 survey, the boat expense category was separated into boat insurance, maintenance, storage, and registration with a total of $1.4 billion spent by anglers in 2006, far less than the previous estimate. Vehicle maintenance was only included on the Pacific Coast form previously ($244 million) and this time maintenance and insurance were added to all forms with a total of $1.3 billion in expenditures. Similarly for second homes, maintenance was only included on the Pacific Coast ($30 million) in the 2000 survey and both insurance and maintenance were included this time for a total of $452 million in expenditures. On balance, the 2006 inflation adjusted estimate across all these categories from the previous survey was $4.7 billion and for the current survey it is $4.6 billion suggesting the addition of these categories did not bias expenditures upward.

Two other methodological changes are worth noting. First, to produce the expenditure estimates from the 2000 survey, CES data were used to determine the proportion of new versus used boats, cars, and second homes, the proportion of these items purchased from private parties versus businesses, and the proportion of these items that were financed. For the 2006 survey, those questions were asked during the survey and the percentages calculated directly from the survey were higher for new purchases, dealer purchases, and financed purchases than either the CES values used before or the current CES values. This has the effect of increasing mean expenditures over the values that would have been used had this analysis relied on the CES data. Secondly, the 2000 survey asked respondents to only report expenditures on goods “primarily” used for saltwater fishing. This time, anglers were asked the percentage of time each expenditure item was used for saltwater fishing in the last year and those percentages were used to determine the value of the purchases associated with saltwater fishing. To attempt to follow the notion of primacy, only goods used more than 50% of the time in saltwater were included in the estimates. The effect of this change on the estimates is unknown.

The USFWS also collected expenditure data from saltwater anglers across the U.S. in 2006. Their data show that anglers across the U.S. spent a total of $8.9 billion on saltwater fishing in 2006 (USFWS 2007), approximately 72% lower than our estimate of total angler expenditures in the U.S. ($31.4 billion). Surprisingly, the USFWS’s estimate of total trip expenditures in the U.S. ($5.3 billion) is only 8.6% lower than our estimate ($5.8 billion). For durable good purchases, however, the difference is far larger with the USFWS reporting $3.6 billion in expenditures across the U.S. in 2006 compared to our estimate of $25.6 billion.

There are three primary reasons why the expenditure estimates presented here are higher than those reported in the USFWS report. First, the durable expenditure estimates presented in this study are driven by MRIP participation estimates. For 2006, the MRIP participation estimates are generally over 3 times higher than the USFWS estimates in those states where both surveys were administered. The disparities are likely due to differences in sampling procedures. The USFWS estimates do not count participation by anglers under 16 years of age and do not fully account for license exemptions as the MRIP telephone survey does (Van Voorhees 2007). Also, the sampling rates used for this study were considerably higher than those used for the USFWS study and the MRIP survey was specifically designed to target only recreational saltwater anglers. In contrast, the USFWS targets freshwater anglers, saltwater anglers, hunters, and other recreational activities as an add-on to the decennial census. Lastly, our study contains spending estimates for far more expenditure categories than shown in the USFWS report. The saltwater expenditure categories missing from the USFWS report include: magazines, club dues, license fees, boat purchases, boat accessories, boat registration, fishing vehicle purchase, fishing vehicle maintenance, fishing vehicle insurance, second home purchase, second home property taxes, second home real estate commissions, second home maintenance, and second home insurance.

At the U.S. level, it was difficult to estimate total angler participation. A resident participant from one state may also have fished in one or more other states or vice-versa. Summing resident and non-resident participation across all states would certainly have overstated participation at the U.S. level. Therefore, only resident participation summed across all of the coastal states was used to expand the durable good expenditure means to total durable expenditures in the U.S. As a result, the durable expenditure estimates shown in this report for the U.S. likely underestimate actual expenditures.

As total angler expenditures increased from 2000 to 2006 so did the economic activity generated from those expenditures. The total sales resulting from angler expenditures in the U.S. increased from $36.7 billion in 2000<sup>2</sup> to $82.3 billion in 2006. The total income produced from angler expenditures, after adjusting for inflation, rose from $14.4 billion in 2000 to $24.0 billion in 2006, and the total employment supported by angler expenditures increased from 349,119 to 533,813 across the U.S. Steinback, Gentner, and Castle (2004) did not provide estimates of value-added generated from angler expenditures. In 2006, we estimate that angler spending generated approximately $38.1 billion in value-added across the U.S.

The majority of the changes in economic activity from 2000 to 2006 are simply due to an overall rise in angler expenditures during this time period. The rest of the differences are the result of structural changes in the economy and because of adjustments in the products and services purchased by anglers. The impact estimates shown in Steinback, Gentner, and Castle (2004) are based on 2000 IMPLAN data and since 2000 the linkages between businesses that support angler expenditures has changed. For this study we utilize 2006 IMPLAN data, so presumably any underlying structural changes in an economy, such as the mix of goods and services purchased by businesses that support angler expenditures, or in the proportions of goods and services purchased from local suppliers (i.e., RPCs), are reflected in the impact estimates shown here.

A comparison of Keynesian multipliers across the two studies provides an indication of the actual mathematical effect that structural changes in an economy and adjustments in the products and services purchased by anglers have had on the level of impacts generated from angler expenditures. Keynesian multipliers are defined as the ratio of total impacts to final expenditures and express the mathematical relationships between angler expenditures and the economic impacts generated from the expenditures (Archer 1984). While these multipliers are not shown here or in the Steinback, Gentner, Castle (2004) report, the astute reader will notice that at the U.S. level the aggregate output multiplier increased from 2000 to 2006 and the income and employment multipliers decreased during this time period. This means that because of structural changes in the U.S. economy and adjustments in the types of products and services purchased by anglers from 2000 to 2006, an average dollar of angler expenditure in 2006 generated comparatively greater total sales, but lower overall income and employment than in 2000. The outcome of these multiplier comparisons across states varies.

Keynesian multipliers can also be used to predict how changes in angler expenditures (increases or decreases) will affect sales, income, value-added, and employment in a region. To do this, one simply has to multiply the appropriate Keynesian multiplier (total impact/total expenditure) by the change. For example, an increase of $100,000 in overall angler expenditures in California would yield a total increase in sales within the state of approximately $122,200 ( $$100,000 \times ($2.99 \text{ million}/$2.62 \text{ million})$ ). Caution is advised, however, when using the expenditure and impact estimates shown in this report to make projections because the projections are based on a particular region's industrial structure in 2006 and if the outcome of an increase in angler expenditures is desired, it must be assumed that there is sufficient productive capacity (i.e., labor and capital) within the region to satisfy an increase in angler expenditures.

The economic impact estimates shown in this report may underestimate the state-level effects associated with marine recreational fishing. Separate models were constructed for each state so the state-level impacts represent only those effects that occurred within the state of interest. Impacts generated through the imports of goods and services from other neighboring coastal states were not part of each individual state assessment. For example, if a retail store in Rhode Island sold fishing tackle that was manufactured in Massachusetts, the impacts associated with the production of the fishing tackle would not be included in the Rhode Island or the Massachusetts impact assessment. The associated wholesale, distribution, and retail mark-ups that occurred in Rhode Island were included in the Rhode Island impact assessment, but the portion attributable to tackle manufacturing was not included in the Massachusetts assessment since the effects were generated from angler purchases in Rhode Island. As such, the state-level impacts generated from angler expenditures in 2006 were likely higher than shown in this report for states that exported fishing-related commodities to other neighboring coastal states. These cross-state effects, however, are captured in the aggregate U.S. model.

Although input-output modeling is the most common approach for describing the structure and interactions of regional economies, it is prudent to be aware of its assumptions regarding linear production functions, constant relative prices, and homogenous sector output. These assumptions are of questionable validity, but are necessary in order to construct the technical coefficients used to determine the direct, indirect, and induced effects in an input-output model. In fact, Propst and Gavrilis (1987) considered these assumptions in their assessment of regional economic impact procedures and concluded that the input-output approach can satisfy the widest range of information needs at high precision levels if primary data are supplied for final demand estimates (i.e., collected directly from anglers as was done for this study).

Another caveat that deserves attention relates to the underlying purpose and use of input-output analysis. In particular, it is a positivistic model designed to identify patterns of transactions and the resource requirements and sector output requirements resulting from changes in economic activity. The input-output approach should not be considered a substitute for normative approaches such as benefit-cost analysis. Benefit-cost analysis seeks to determine whether resources are being put to their best use by examining the difference between total economic value and total costs. In the context of recreational fishing, total net economic value is generally defined as willingness to pay in excess of actual expenditures. Alternatively, input-output assessments reveal how actual expenditures affect economic activity within each sector of an economy.

It is difficult to compare the impacts generated from marine recreational fishing to those generated from commercial fishing and no attempt was made to do so here. Recreational impacts are often compared to the dockside value of commercial fisheries landings, but this comparison fails to recognize the value-added impacts associated with fish processors, wholesale fish dealers, and the retail markets where the commercial catch is sold to consumers. These forward linked sectors could add considerable sales, income, and employment impacts to those generated from commercial harvesting alone. Studies that attempt to compare the impacts generated from recreational fishing to those generated from the sale of seafood in commercial markets should attempt to incorporate all of the backward and forward linkages associated with the commercial harvesting of seafood. Recreational fishing may also generate additional sales, income, employment, and tax impacts through incidental purchases by non-fishing companions and the auxiliary expenditures that occur on trips that were part of a longer vacation. If these types of expenditures occur as a direct result of fishing, a case could be made that any comparison to the commercial sector should also include the impacts generated from these supplemental expenditures.

<sup>a</sup> The number of completed surveys shown in this Table includes those with some missing responses. Although most anglers provided useable responses to all of the survey questions, if the majority of the expenditure questions were answered by a particular respondent the survey was considered completed.

<sup>b</sup> The number of surveys mailed in Florida exceeded the number of MRIP addresses collected because the majority of the angler addresses used in the mailing originated from CML license files and volunteers that agreed to participate in the study.

I am a Private Recreational Angler

I have been recreational fishing in the Gulf of Mexico for over 50 years and have seen many changes. Fish populations need to be regulated like any other crop. Fish can not prosper if they do not have plenty to eat with little or no pollution in the water. If the fish in the Gulf do not have food (fish) they will eat each other. A king just as soon eat baby red snapper, redfish, or dolphin if they can not find any menhaden to eat. Therefore we need to limit & control the netting of menhaden and other food fish to ensure that our "crop" has enough to eat & prosper. I can remember when you could see schools of pogy on the surface for miles upon miles with fish feeding on these schools. A red snapper lays over a million eggs. What will determine how many of these will grow up to be adults? There would be plenty of red snapper to go around, recreational & commercial it we could use our heads to regulate the menhaden (food fish) industry. I was told at a meeting that I attended years ago in New Orleans that we can not regulate the catch of menhaden & other "food fish" because they are not eatable. We will never be able to feed our crop if we can not control the "food fish" butchers. There will never be any of these "food fish" for our crop of eatable fish to eat. Zapada boasts in there sign at the entrance to their plant in Intra Coastal City: King of the seafood industry with millions & millions of pounds of menhaden caught. Our crop of eatable fish will starve to death because our lack of control of the "food fish" industry. My dad taught agriculture in High School, and he always taught that you had to test your soil to make sure that the soil could feed your crop. On land or in the ocean you have to feed your crop. This is the observation for an Old Sea Captain that has been around & seen a lot.

Ref: Amendment 28 to the FMP for the Reef Fish Resources in the Gulf of Mexico

Dear Mr. Boyd,

Coastal Conservation Association (CCA) is writing in reference to the Federal Register notice of November 7, 2013, which requested comments by December 9, 2013 pursuant to proposed Amendment 28 to the Fishery Management Plan for the Reef Fish Resources of the Gulf of Mexico. CCA is a grassroots organization with roughly 80,000 members along the Gulf Coast dedicated to the conservation, promotion and enhancement of the present and future availability of coastal resources for the benefit and enjoyment of the general public.

CCA's comments on this Amendment reflect support for increasing recreational allocation to improve recreational fishing opportunities and increase the return of red snapper management to the American public. We appreciate the opportunity to provide the following comments in support of reallocating the red snapper stock to increase recreational allocations.

The road to this point has been a long and uncertain one. Page 7 of the NOAA Catch Share Policy states "NOAA recommends Councils periodically revisit the underlying total allocation to each sector of a fishery (e.g., commercial and recreational) on a regular basis, regardless of whether catch shares are the management tool of choice for one or more sectors."<sup>1</sup> Regardless of whether there is an existing catch share in the fishery, a catch share is being developed or a catch share is not recommended, the policy calls for revisiting the underlying allocation regularly. The policy goes on to state that while reallocation will be controversial and challenging to undertake, MSA National Standards require that fishery resources must be managed to provide the "greatest overall benefit" to the nation, particularly regarding recreational opportunities.

For the last several years, the Gulf of Mexico Fishery Management Council has been unwilling to live up to this mandate, even in the face of numerous studies that show the current 51 percent/49 percent split is economically inefficient and that increasing the recreational allocation would increase the total benefits of red snapper management to the American public (Agar and Carter, 2012; Carter and Liese, 2012; Griffin et al., 2009; Haab et al., 2009; Gillig et al., 2003; Gillig et al., 2000)<sup>2</sup>. The Council has repeatedly ignored this peer reviewed research because of uncertainty surrounding the data and the models used to generate those results.

However, it is the Council's duty to act on the reallocation mandate using the best available information. Additional evidence that allocations need to be adjusted was recently bolstered by yet another analysis by Juan Agar and David Carter presented at the November 8th, 2013, Socioeconomics Science and Statistical Committee (SESSC) meeting in Tampa, Florida. Their analysis extended the result from their 2012 examination to estimate the magnitude of economic value increases that would arise from each of the alternatives in Amendment 28.

This presentation showed that the benefits to the nation increase substantially with the alternatives in Amendment 28 that support higher amounts of fish being allocated to the recreational sector. The analysis was of the least/most variety with all assumptions in the commercial analysis made to estimate commercial upper-bound values while all assumptions made in the recreational analysis made to estimate a lower-bound recreational value. Even when analyzing the Alternatives in this fashion, Alternative 2, the smallest recreational increase, generated $2.7 million in additional value for the country and Alternative 4, the highest recreational increase, generated $9.0 million.

This analysis shows definitively that allocations need to change in the recreational sector's favor. The analysis indicates that the economic benefits to the nation are highest under Alternative 4 that allocates 10 percent more fish to the recreational sector. The SESSC agrees with and supports the analysis conclusions as presented, passing motions at their November 2013 meeting endorsing this analysis and the conclusion as presented by the National Marine Fisheries Service economists Agar and Carter. The SESSC backed down from their previous stance of not approving anything but small allocation shifts, opening the door for the council to allocate as much as 10 percent more fish to the recreational sector.

This result shows that the SESSC recognizes that managers have to make decisions based on the best information available and that the current analysis of the economic value of changing recreational allocation is the best available science. It is disingenuous to use Marine Recreational Information Program data in stock assessments that are then used to set harvest levels and season lengths only to turn around and conclude that allocations cannot be changed because of data concerns or uncertainty concerns. These most recent SESSC motions reflect their decision that the data is indeed the best available and that the value estimates were generated using the best available methods. The motions passed by the SESSC provide the necessary support for the Council to increase recreational allocations.

Thus, based on the best information available, NOAA's own policy on periodically reviewing allocation, and to fulfill the statutory requirements of the Magnuson-Stevens Act to manage these resources to provide the greatest benefits to the nation, CCA advocates that the Council select Alternative 4 in Amendment 28 as the best option.

However, if for some reason Alternative 4 is not selected by the Council, it is imperative based on the information from your own SESSC, that the Council select an alternative that does, for the first time, shift some significant percentage of allocation to the recreational sector. This could be achieved by selecting Alternative 6. But again, the Council has the science, the policy and the law to select Alternative 4 and should do so.

We appreciate that the Council is finally addressing the outdated allocation currently in place and hope that a standardized, objective and regular allocation review process can be devised that will allow this responsibility to become standard operating procedure for the Council in the future.

Sincerely,

Now that the TAC for Red Snapper harvest in the Gulf has returned to the original 9.12 million pounds and even beyond; most of the additional poundage should go to the recreational sector. The commercial sector should stay at or near their originally GIFTED quota of 4.65 million pounds until the recreational sector returns to their original 195 day season.. The new overabundance of Red Snapper is being brought forth by the recreational sector building new reefs and their shortened seasons. Time and again we hear that the IFQ system--CATCH SHARES has saved the red snapper; that is BS. Those commercial boys are still catching the same amount of snapper that they always have, the only thing that has saved the red snapper and caused them to prosper is that the recreational sector has gone from fishing 4 fish 195 days a year to fishing 2 fish 27 to 45 days a year. . This is why we have so many red snapper the shortened seasons and the vast amounts of reefs being built --BY and FOR the recreational sector ; yet we reap no benefits. Any TAC above the original 9.12 million pounds should be split 90% for the rec sector and 10% for the commercial side until recreational fishermen return to their original season of 195 days--just as the commercial sector has already returned to their original 2007 quota.

Mr. Doug Boyd, Chair
2203 North Lois Avenue
Tampa, FL 33607

Dear Mr. Boyd:

Thank you for the opportunity to provide our recommendations. Environmental Defense Fund is writing to urge you, in your role as Chair of the Gulf of Mexico Fishery Management Council, to guide the Council's members to find ways to manage fisheries to ensure the long-term health of fish populations and to maintain the variety of benefits which society enjoys from a healthy Gulf ecosystem, including fresh local seafood and sport activities.

We are proud to join with restaurants, chefs, local seafood and fishing businesses, and recreational partners as a member of the recently-launched Share the Gulf coalition. Thanks to the past actions of the Council, the Gulf has experienced first-hand how management reforms, like those implemented for the red snapper, grouper and tilefish commercial fisheries, can simultaneously help rebuild and sustain fish populations, turn around struggling businesses, and better serve the seafood industry and nation. Thus, we are confident that recreational fisheries, still struggling under ineffective regulations, can share these benefits once old strategies – especially those seeking to vilify commercial fishing and seafood interests – are replaced with proposals to sustain healthy stocks, provide more favorable recreational fishing opportunities, and meet the requirements of the law. In an earlier letter to the Council, EDF offered our idea on what new proposals might look like, including a vision of a shared reef fish fishery that is managed by maintaining the commercial plan, exploring a recreational for-hire IFQ program for vessels that operate in federal waters, and a “regional management” approach for private anglers.<sup>1</sup>

Based on the Council's success in managing commercial red snapper and other reef fish, we know that when fisheries are well managed there are enough fish for all to share and enjoy. Today, we offer two recommendations:

- 1. The Gulf Council should suspend consideration of Amendment 28 to “reallocate” red snapper currently allotted to commercial fishermen (and consumers) to recreational fishermen.

http://www.gulfcouncil.org/fishery\_management\_plans/Public%20Comment/Amendment%2028%20-%20Allocation/allocation.pdf

Much of Share the Gulf's emphasis has been to maintain a fair allocation of red snapper between seafood and recreational interests. This is important because demands for local fresh seafood and recreation are both strong, and they both are valuable. This is also critical for conservation since the commercial management plan is contributing to rebuilding of red snapper. The red snapper allocation is 51% for commercial and 49% for recreational fisheries. This is approximately 5.5 million pounds for each this year; but while the commercial catch is slightly below its limit, recreational management allows large, persistent overharvests (46% over in 2012).<sup>2</sup> Thus, reallocation elevates the potential for return to "overfishing" status and can violate federal law.

The Council's own science and economic advisors have stated there is no economic rationale for reallocation,<sup>3</sup> and other analyses show that there are no lasting benefits to anglers when management is limited to seasons and bag limits.<sup>4</sup> Shifting more fish to the recreational fishery will not provide longer seasons or solve problems. Therefore, reallocation is also harmful because it is a distraction from exploring meaningful solutions.

2. The Gulf Council should focus on exploring management options for the recreational red snapper and reef fish fisheries that focus on providing the benefits which anglers and others seek.

The Council can use specific objectives to guide its exploration to improve recreational fishing. Several priorities are evident:

- Improving fishing opportunities through longer and more flexible fishing seasons;
- Providing stability and flexibility for for-hire operations to serve clients and run a successful business;
- Increasing the timeliness and accuracy of catch accounting systems;
- Reducing and eliminating regulatory discards and overharvests; and
- Complying with the law.

The Council is considering a "regional management" proposal (Amendment 39) which maintains today's management tools and divides the recreational red snapper allocation among the Gulf states to set their own seasons and bag limits. We agree that regional management can help states provide local benefits, particularly for private anglers. However, Amendment 39 does not allow use of new tools which can achieve longer seasons and other benefits. To succeed, Amendment 39 should be improved to ensure it addresses the objectives above.

We look forward to working with you to develop management that benefits anglers, continues and expands success with commercial and seafood interests, and fosters continued rebuilding of red snapper and other reef fish populations.

Gulf of Mexico Fisheries Management Council Written Comment Aug. 28, 2013 Meeting

My name is Tracy Redding and I am the President of AAA Charters Inc. a charter booking service for for-hire fishing and sightseeing charters along the Alabama Gulf Coast. I have been operating this small business for a decade.

Although I have curtailed traveling to each of the Gulf Council meetings, I continue to listen to the meeting on the web link provided. I am extremely grateful this opportunity is provided for those that wish to continue to participate in Council proceedings; but are unable to travel across the Gulf Coast, at our own expense, throughout the year. I have also found the Gulf Council use of social media quite effective and informative. I still remain hopeful that improvements can be made to the management of the for-fire recreational fishery that can return the charter industry to a viable business. If drastic improvements are not made within the next 2 years, our future is doomed.

I offer a few specific recommendations to actions currently under consideration by the Gulf Council.

- Amendment 39 Regional Management. I fully support moving forward with Regional Management for red snapper in the Gulf of Mexico dividing the Gulf into 5 regions corresponding with State Lines and the EEZ south of these zones (for recreational anglers ONLY, commercial fishery should remain in the federal IFQ system).
- Amendment 39 Allocation of fishing quotas, Action 3, Alternative 2 Option D using 50% in put from historical landings from 1986-2012 and 50% input from 2006-2012 PLUS eliminate both of the years 2006 and 2010 from the equations.
- Provide the Accountability Measure of requiring a payback during the following season from any region that exceeds the quota.
- If any or some of the Gulf States are not yet prepared to manage their region, they should remain in the “default” federal season until they are prepared and/or willing to proceed with managing their region. The lack of resources and/or interest of a Gulf State should not hold back those states that are ready to try something new. I have FULL confidence in the abilities of our leadership within the Alabama Department of Natural Resources to responsibly meet the challenge of managing the waters off the Alabama shores. I believe our state is willing and able to utilize electronic logbooks within the CFH industry immediately improving data collection within a significant portion of our recreational anglers. Alabama has a long history in investing in our marine resources by building a world class reef zone, and I believe Alabama can provide the resources necessary to immediately manage these fisheries. Alabama has a strong reputation for protecting the natural resources with which we are blessed and I hope this authority is expanded to manage the red snapper fishery off our shores.

- EFP for the Head boat Charter pilot program. It is absolutely essential that the quota set aside for this program is deducted off the top of the recreational fishing quotas (if regional management is in place, the quota should come off the top of that state's quota, or if default state, the federal EEZ quota.) I believe all other current EFP come off the top. This program should not be an exception. As Roy Crabtree testified this week, to not take the quota off the top would COMPLETELY undermine the entire project.
- I support maintaining the provisions in 30B preventing federally permitted charter boats fishing from states with federally non-compliant fishing regulations from fishing both the federal season in the EEZ and fishing in state waters during these expanded seasons. I heard quite a bit of moaning from TX and FL fishermen about how unfair this provision seems to them; but following their state's decision to expand fishing seasons within their state waters, anglers from Alabama directly lost fishing days this year. This provision needs to stay in place.
- I am opposed to any reallocation of red snapper quota! I am a recreational angler, I make my living in the charter boat industry, and I am a consumer of Gulf Seafood. The availability of fresh, Gulf caught seafood is also crucial to our communities. Our chefs need to be able to depend on yearlong access to reef fish. I don't come to NOLA to eat catfish from Asia. Our commercial fishermen have developed an effective management program that has maximized their profits and they have never exceeded the commercial quota for red snapper, a claim recreational anglers can't even dream of in the near future. Any reallocation from the commercial sector to the recreational anglers undermines the accomplishments achieved by commercial fishermen. In my option, the commercial sector has earned the bump in quota. I hope the charter for hire industry can follow in the commercial fisherman's tracks.

Thank you for considering my input.

Tracy Redding

Mr. Doug Boyd, Chair
Gulf of Mexico Fishery Management Council
2203 North Lois Avenue
Tampa, FL 33607

Dear Mr. Boyd:

Thank you for the opportunity to provide comments on the management of Gulf of Mexico fisheries. We are writing to offer comments and recommendations for improving management of the red snapper fishery. The Gulf Council is devoting significant and on-going time and resources to management of this fishery, driven by the frustrations of fishermen, states, and conservationists. In one way this is surprising since the recovery of the red snapper fishery is one of the Gulf Council's most significant accomplishments. The fish population is rebuilding on schedule after decades of overfishing, consumers have access to fresh snapper year-round after years of alternating scarcity and gluts, and the Gulf's local commercial fishing businesses are making a greater contribution to the region's economy.

The central problem today is that the recreational management plan does not allow anglers to benefit from the increasingly healthy stock. Instead, it fosters harvests consistently higher than allowed and derby fishing with extremely short fishing seasons, waste of valuable fish, and lost opportunities for anglers and fishing related businesses. The lack of on-the-water progress in solving the problem is pitting fishermen against fishermen and states against the federal government.

Given the challenges facing recreational red snapper fishing and the intense interest of stakeholders, the Gulf Council rightly prioritizes work to improve it. However, the actions on the table, including "regional management" (Amendment 39) and "reallocation" of commercial catch to the recreational quota (Amendment 28), are almost certain to fall far short. Regional management as currently envisioned will do little to extend fishing seasons and improve quota compliance because it does not allow use of new tools that can address the derby problem. Reallocation as proposed threatens to reverse hard-earned rebuilding because it undermines the effectiveness of the commercial management program which makes a significant contribution to the stock's on-going recovery.

We offer four key recommendations:

- Delay final action on regional management (Amendment 39) until adequate information and analyses on individual state-based plans, and how the plans of the five states work together, are available and determined by the Gulf Council and stakeholders to achieve, at a minimum, longer fishing seasons for private and for-hire fishing, adequate catch accounting, and better compliance with catch limits (in comparison with today's plan).

- Halt action on reallocation of commercial red snapper quota to the recreational quota (Amendment 28) because the alternatives provided do not help achieve anglers' goals of significantly longer seasons and provide no conservation benefits, and reallocation puts rebuilding at risk as it threatens the success of commercial management.
- Refocus problem-solving away from a view of "winners vs. losers" (e.g., commercial vs. recreational, for-hire vs. private anglers, and states vs. NMFS) toward seeking ways that simultaneously benefit all stakeholders – commercial businesses and consumers, for-hire and private recreational anglers – and sustain the health of the red snapper population.
- Explore the potential for the Gulf Council to convene a strategic planning or "visioning" process to help overcome the red snapper stalemate, potentially modeled on those conducted recently by the New England, Mid-Atlantic and South Atlantic councils.

Our recommendations and detailed comments are discussed below:

Delay final action on regional management (Amendment 39) until adequate information and analyses on individual state-based plans, and how the plans of the five states work together, are available and determined by the Gulf Council and stakeholders to achieve, at a minimum, longer fishing seasons for private and for-hire fishing, adequate accountability, and better compliance with catch limits (in comparison with today's plan).

In concept, we agree with the states and Gulf Council that state fish and game agencies may be better suited than the Council to manage some aspects of the recreational fishery, especially private angling. We also understand the states' and Council's urgency to take steps to solve the problems facing the recreational fishery.

However, regional (or state-based) management, as currently proposed in Amendment 39, is unlikely to provide many benefits and it may even increase risks to the health of the stock and potentially reduce fishermen's access. To date, the Gulf Council, including members representing state agencies, has not analyzed and resolved important complexities of state-based management. The Amendment's "Environmental Consequences" analysis points to significant uncertainties, including whether states can adequately restrain harvest, how rescinding Amendment 30B (allowing over one thousand federally-licensed for-hire vessels to operate in state waters) would impact overages and potentially re-trigger "overfishing," how states will handle dockside enforcement (potentially including higher costs), and many other issues.<sup>1</sup> The analysis also points to the difficulty of even analyzing effects on the red snapper stock and reef fish complex, noting that “without knowing what management measures would result from this action, it is difficult to compare the alternatives.”<sup>2</sup>

Council members and the public have also stated misgivings. One key issue is whether decisions about how much quota will be allocated to each state can adequately account for important factors other than landings history, including a potentially healthier red snapper population structure in the Western Gulf and the expanding range off Florida. Another issue is determining whether allocations will be set for an indefinite time, and whether (and how) they will be adjusted over time. In public comments, many stakeholders, including recreational fishermen, have expressed frustration and confusion given the scant details provided, especially about how each state intends to manage its allocation on the water. As a fisherman stated at the July Council meeting in New Orleans, “I’d just like to see how it will be better.”

In summary, the Gulf Council should only grant greater management authority to the states once they demonstrate how their plans will provide more benefits and perform (e.g. comply with catch limits) better than the existing plan. This is a reasonable bar for such an important management effort. .

Halt action on reallocation of commercial red snapper quota to the recreational quota (Amendment 28) because the alternatives provided do not help achieve anglers’ goals of significantly longer seasons and provide no conservation benefits, and reallocation puts rebuilding at risk as it threatens the success of commercial management.

Amendment 28 to reallocate red snapper from the commercial to recreational quota states the “need” for the action as “to prevent overfishing while achieving the optimum yield.”<sup>3</sup> However, without improvements in management of the recreational fishery, the pattern of overages will continue even if the recreational quota is higher, and the result is almost certain to be larger quota overages. Since the beginning of commercial red snapper IFQs in 2007, the recreational fishery has represented between 56% and 65% of total red snapper landings – significantly more than its 49% allocation.<sup>4</sup> Table 2.1.4 in the Amendment 28 options paper demonstrates that even the most aggressive reallocations can increase the fishing season by only a few days at best, and then seasons will continue to shrink.<sup>5</sup> Reallocation will not bring stability to the recreational fishery. Instead it will undermine commercial management’s contribution to rebuilding by reducing commercial fishermen’s economic stake in the fishery.

Management actions, like Amendment 28, that introduce risks to rebuilding and threaten to return the stock to “overfishing” status can be in violation of the Magnuson-Stevens Act’s central requirement to prevent overfishing and the requirement to rebuild fisheries as soon as possible.<sup>6</sup> Considerations of shifting quota to the recreational sector prior to improving catch accountability would call into question the red snapper FMP's requirement to contain "measures to ensure accountability,"<sup>7</sup> and appears to violate National Standard 4, which states that allocations shall be "reasonably calculated to promote conservation."<sup>8</sup> In addition, while the Council currently emphasizes economic efficiency, National Standard 5 requires that economic efficiency cannot be the sole criterion in allocation decisions, overriding other national standards and rebuilding requirements.<sup>9</sup>

It is also important to note that the reallocation alternatives in Amendment 28 are not supported by the economic analysis presented. The issue of "economic efficiency" is being highlighted in relation to improving net benefits for the nation, one objective of fishery management. However, the reallocation alternatives in Amendment 28 are not supported by analysis from NMFS and the Council's Socioeconomic SSC (SESSC). This analysis shows that that the reallocation alternatives simply replace one inefficiency with another.<sup>10,11</sup>

While the analysis suggests the values (or willingness to pay) for additional red snapper quota are different in the commercial and recreational sectors, this does not mean that net benefits will be increased by shifting quota. This is because values change as allocations change, and how much those values could change is unknown. The best available science cannot measure how reallocation will change net benefits to the nation – and as long as anglers are faced with management that offers only low bag limits and short seasons, there is no reason to believe any reallocated quota will go to the anglers who value it most.<sup>12</sup> For these reasons, the Council's SESSC advised that it does not support reallocation except by trading quota across sectors.<sup>13</sup> Inter-sector trade would be an economically efficient way for quota to shift between sectors; but by itself, this will do nothing to improve the way recreational red snapper quota is tracked and managed.<sup>14</sup>

Comprehensive fishery management that seeks to simultaneously benefit all stakeholders will be challenging, however in the long-run it has the potential to reduce conflict and produce better results. There is no reason that stakeholders can gain only at the expense of others, although trade-offs and compromises are necessary. Recreational and commercial fisheries are each important to the Gulf's economy and culture. Fishermen and seafood markets seek access, availability, flexibility, and the long-term health of the stock. The challenge before the Gulf Council is to find solutions to manage a popular yet limited red snapper stock. If well managed, the fishery can provide benefits to all parties while balancing conservation objectives.

While there are tremendous resources devoted to improving the management of the red snapper fishery, there is little progress on reversing the trends of shrinking seasons and overharvests in the recreational sector. There are no ideas being discussed that simultaneously provide benefits for fishermen, fishing businesses, and U.S. seafood markets. We offer one idea for your consideration. (See attached op-ed published in the Houston Chronicle.)<sup>15</sup>

The commercial management plan, operating in federal waters, is working well. This part is already in place and serves growing demand for wild fresh seafood. On the for-hire recreational side, a fleet-specific IFQ design could be explored for vessels that operate in federal waters. The boats would have the opportunity to make the most of the limited catch for angler clients and their businesses. For private anglers, the regional management concept under consideration by the Gulf Council may be a good start, but it needs to allow use of new management tools. States could have a designated quota and also authority to try tools that can perform better than short seasons and small bag limits. Harvest tags like those used for big game hunting might be allocated to tourist seasons, tournaments, and other priorities to expand fishing opportunities available with the limited catch.

The Gulf Council is in uncharted territory managing our shared reef fish resources for seafood and recreational opportunities. We encourage others with a constructive point of view to share their own vision and contribute to lasting solutions.

Explore the potential for the Gulf Council to convene a strategic planning or “visioning” process to help overcome the red snapper stalemate, modeled on those conducted recently by the New England, Mid-Atlantic and South Atlantic councils.

Councils around the country are exploring creative processes to complement the traditional Council process in solving problems. Given the diversity of stakeholder positions on red snapper and other reef fish management, a structured process that steps back from specific amendments and instead focuses on the “big picture” might help. In 2012, the Mid-Atlantic Council conducted a “visioning and strategic planning process” designed to develop a comprehensive, stakeholder-informed vision for the region’s fisheries that was used to inform the Council’s strategic plan. The Council reported that the visioning process not only engaged stakeholders on regulations and management processes, but also succeeded in building trust and improving relationships.<sup>16</sup> Other Councils have conducted similar processes; the New England Council conducted a regional assessment and management review of the fishery management process in 2011, and the South Atlantic Council initiated more focused visioning workshops for the Snapper Grouper Committee in 2012. These might serve as models for the Gulf Council in reconciling the visions and expectations of fishery stakeholders with the long-term goals of the Council.<sup>17 18</sup>

Thank you for considering our comments and recommendations. We look forward to working with you to find a solution that benefits all of the stakeholders who care about sustainable Gulf of Mexico fisheries.

New rules are needed for recreational fishing

A regional approach might offer a better management system

By Pamela Baker

In June, Texas anglers experienced the exciting start – and unfortunate stop – of the red snapper recreational fishing season in offshore Gulf waters. Those twenty-eight days of exhilarating and frantic fishing, will now be followed by months of closures and disappointment. As frustration mounts, fishermen are crying foul while Texas and other Gulf states are feuding with the federal government over how to manage recreational fishing. The system is broken, and new rules are needed to help anglers get better access to the red snapper they're allowed to catch.

This story is a familiar one. For years, the Gulf's fishery management council (comprised of federal and state officials and representatives of the fishing industry) set seasons that closed down commercial red snapper fishing when its harvest limit was reached. The rules pressed fishermen to catch as many fish as fast as possible, and seasons steadily shrank. Daily catch and fish size limits to slow fishing down forced fishermen to throw huge numbers of red snapper overboard. Racing and waste were the norm and the stock was in serious decline. Red snapper was hard to find in grocery stores most of the year and was growing scarce for anglers out on the water.

This turned around when the commercial share was divided among fishermen with each being responsible for complying with his limit (called individual fishing quotas). Fishermen benefit from higher limits when the stock grows, so they have reasons to conserve for the future. Now, the red snapper population is rebounding and wild, sustainable red snapper are available in U.S. seafood markets all year.

Recreational fishermen can have similar benefits, but today's system is bewildering. As the red snapper stock grows, the fishing season shrinks while anglers catch their share of the fish (about half of the overall limit) faster with bigger snapper. With management based on closed seasons, the racing and waste frustrate everyone, and if it continues the growth of the population seen over the last few years could be reversed. Anglers follow the rules, but the rules don't work.

To get longer seasons and ensure sustainability, new plans are needed that meet the desires of anglers who fish with captains aboard "for-hire" or charter boats and those who fish on their own boats. A federal fishery advisory panel has discussed allowing for-hire boats to operate under a specially-designed individual fishing quota program. This could help business-minded captains who serve anglers to make the most of the allowed catch, as it has with the commercial fleet.

A different type of proposal by Texas and other Gulf states for "regional management" might be promising for anglers who fish from their own boats and are more accustomed to working with state fishery agencies (rather than the federal ones). The plan divides the recreational share of the fishery among states to manage off their own coasts. This is a good start, but it needs to allow use of new tools, not be limited to old ones. States need authority to try concepts like harvest tags used for big game hunting that could be allocated to tourist seasons, tournaments, and other priorities. Greater authority should be granted by the federal government to states that demonstrate how their plans will work better and provide more benefits to anglers than the existing plan.

Texas and the Gulf states are in uncharted territory managing red snapper for the growing U.S. demand for wild sustainable fish and recreational opportunities. And there is no doubt the existing recreational red snapper catch can be managed to provide far greater benefits to anglers and all of us that enjoy the fish. Together, we can find a solution that meets recreational goals, complies with the law and rebuilding targets, and preserves the long-term benefits provided by this shared public resource.

RE: Red Snapper Catch Limits and Regional Management (Amendment 39), Red Snapper Allocation Options Paper (Amendment 28) and Final Action on IFQ Administrative Rule Changes.

Dear Chairman Boyd:

On behalf of The Gulf of Mexico Reef Fish Shareholders Alliance, we offer the following comments regarding the regional management approach proposed under Amendment 39 to the Gulf of Mexico Fishery Management Council's (Council) Reef Fish Fishery Management Plan and the Red Snapper Allocation Options Paper (Amendment 28), which are inextricably tied together through political rhetoric.

Amendment 39:

Though established from the need to better manage the recreational fisheries, the proposed regional management plan (Amendment 39) introduces additional management uncertainty and makes little attempt at accountability measures required to ensure the continued health and growth of the stock. To this point, we strongly encourage the implementation of post-season accountability measures (e.g., overage payback provisions) as a method to prevent overfishing and ensure stock recovery when ACLs are exceeded. We recommend:

- Ensuring regional management operates under the federal umbrella to ensure continuity of the science-based rebuilding plan and recovery of this species, while giving each state authority to manage their percentage of the ACL.[Amendment 39, Action 1, Preferred Alternative #2].
- Applying state-based payback provisions when the Gulf-wide ACL is exceeded to keep the rebuilding plan on track [Amendment 39, Action 6, Preferred Alternative #3].

- States should consider use of an annual catch target (ACT) to further capture additional management uncertainty incurred by regional management.
- The Amendment must not include the commercial sector as part of its plan since the inception of the IFQ program has proven significant accountability measures leading to no overfishing.
- The Amendment must not have ANY ties to the commercial IFQ programs as that defies the logic and need for state management of a RECREATIONAL sector in need of a strong management system to generate good science, and good data leading to a healthy recreational sector with growing seasons and no overharvest.
- Management actions introducing risks to rebuilding and threaten to return the stock to “overfishing” status can be in violation of the Magnuson-Stevens Act's central requirement to prevent overfishing.

Amendment 28:

- The red snapper IFQ program is achieving the conservation and economic goals established by the Gulf Council and Magnuson-Stevens Act per the review of the Gulf Council.
- Amendment 28 explores potentially reallocating red snapper from the commercial to recreational quota stating that the “need” for the action is “to prevent overfishing while achieving the optimum yield.”
- As stated above, Management actions introducing risks to rebuilding and threaten to return the stock to “overfishing” status can be in violation of the Magnuson-Stevens Act's central requirement to prevent overfishing
- We support the status quo 2.1 Action 1 Alternative 1- No Action- in Amendment 28. Maintain the allocation set in Amendment 1 of the Reef Fish Fishery Management Plan.
- Given that no new quantifiable data has been presented, no formal full-scale economic study has been completed of the commercial sector and that discussions of a 1% allocation shift of red snapper would not even provide a marginal benefit to the recreational sector, yet every pound lost to the commercial sector is a fish lost to the American consumer and the entire seafood supply chain----NO shifting of allocation should take place at this time.
- National Standard 4, states that allocations shall be “reasonably calculated to promote conservation.” and any shift to the recreational sector which remains unaccountable at this time intimates a standard violation.

- There has been no valid argument presented other than bias from other organizations for reallocation given that the commercial sector is accountable, not overfishing and providing a protein source to millions of Americans. Reallocation has been proven by your SESSC that it does not solve the short recreational season and the economic basis, which is justified for less than a 1% shift effectively, does nothing for the recreational season. National Standard 5 also requires that economic efficiency cannot be the sole criterion in allocation decisions, overriding other national standards and rebuilding requirements.

Thus, science and the national standards have proven there is no basis for reallocation discussion save a power grab by what are viewed as competing entities. Furthermore, all discussions of Regional Management should be viewed with detailed speculation for an allocation ploy instead of the intended need for effective management of a sector.

Final Action on IFQ Administrative Rule Changes

We are in agreement that the red snapper IFQ management system has met its programmatic goals and played a significant factor in reducing discards, mitigating the race for fish, improving safety at sea, and rebuilding of our iconic fishery.

We agree with the Proposed IFQ Administrative Rule Changes as these were all industry recommendations.

Program Review Recommendations are:

-Establish formal review procedures/guidelines including, timeline, procedures for public input, analyses required, role of SERO, Gulf Council, SESSC, SEFSC, and Aps and (we would like to add Industry stakeholders to this list)

-Align future reviews with the grouper/tilefish-IFQ program; Both are part of same multispecies fishery and it is redundant and economically unsound to review one program without review of the other.

These recommendations will allow the current snapper program to streamline, continue meeting its goals and work toward rebuilding the fishery.

NONE of these recommendations or changes will trip a threshold creating the need for a referendum. And given that we have considerable challenges on the Council table such as overfishing, lack of AM's in the recreational sector, regional management, a struggling charter industry and reallocation; we recommend:

- Focusing on the severe problems facing our fisheries as stated above.
- Implement these simplistic changes to strengthen the only management systems currently working effectively in the Gulf.
- And that we should address any potential major changes to the IFQ system upon the 5 year review of the grouper/tilefish program.

Thank you for your continued efforts to serve and strengthen our Gulf.

To Whom It May Concern:

As the Mayor for the City of Madeira Beach and on behalf of the City Commission, I am writing to express our continued support of the commercial & recreational fishing industry. Madeira Beach hosts one of the largest Grouper fleets in the Gulf of Mexico. John's Pass is one of the top departure points for recreational anglers on the west coast of Florida. Together they are important components in our City's economy and also contribute to Florida's economy as a whole and deserve our support.

The commercial fishing industry creates jobs that not only include fishing but also processing, fuel, maintenance, supplies, permits, insurance & docking charges. Locals and tourists not only enjoy the delicious fresh seafood which in turn supports restaurants and fresh seafood markets but also enjoy the opportunity to be able to enjoy a fishing experience on the Gulf of Mexico. Supporting this renewable industry and resource are public sector jobs such as the Coast Guard, Florida Fish and Wildlife and the Gulf of Mexico Fishery Management Council.

We will to continue to support fishery through infrastructure development and encourage renewed professionalism, accountability and conservation through sustainable fishing practices.

Respectfully,

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Council:

Thank you for considering these comments on behalf of Fish for America. We are an organization committed to providing safe and healthy seafood to millions of American consumers. We are an industry that is beginning to realize the very real benefits of sustainability. We are highly accountable to all stakeholders of Gulf resources! We are pioneering the traceability of every pound of our harvest from the Gulf to the plate.

Our comments today are specific to the Scoping Document for Amendment #28 and the apparent lack of guidance and rationale for the proposed actions. More specifically, we consider the Council's Guidelines for Allocation and seek to call into question the Council's motivations for even considering such a poorly justified public policy action.

The Scoping Document offers two reasons for proposing Amendment #28; a requisite five year review of FMP allocations and the tenuous conclusion of the Carter/Agar papers that small reallocations MAY be warranted in the reef fish complex. The Scoping Document does not, however, offer any other social or economic rationale for moving forward, nor does it offer any clear objectives that reallocation seeks to achieve and analyses to quantify the effects. This is in direct contradiction of the Council's own Guidelines 2(b) and (d).

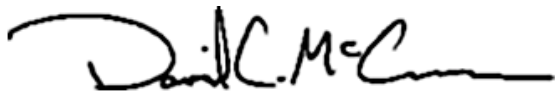

Item 1.C(2) is probably the strongest indictment of the current proposed action on reallocation; "Allocation shall...consider efficient utilization of fishery resources, but prohibit measures that have economic allocation as its sole purpose." If the Council is unwilling to consider additional accountability measures and request NMFS to conduct other socioeconomic analyses, then this guideline alone should result in the immediate demise of the Amendment #28 process.

The current state of the recreational fishery should also preclude moving forward with this amendment. Guideline 2(f) states "Indirect changes in allocation, i.e., shifts in allocation resulting from management measures, should be avoided or minimized to the extent possible". The recreational sector has overfished their annual allocation fourteen of the past twenty-two years; most dramatically, by double their allocation in the early 1990's and most recently, by one-and-a-half times. Speaking strictly in terms of reallocation of commercial quota to the recreational fishery, and if the TAC were not exceeded, the 2009 season represented an effective allocation ratio of 7% commercial to 93% recreational. Did that huge indirect reallocation improve the recreational fishing experience? Season length has dropped 86% in six years to a low of 27 days scheduled for 2013.

Item #3, Suggested Methods for Determining (Re)Allocation identifies twenty-three potential mechanisms for implementing and determining the efficacy of a reallocation action; however, the Council seems justified in analyzing only two of these mechanisms (historical landings and net benefits to the nation) in moving forward with Amendment #28. The structure of this proposed amendment and the rest of the Council's agenda effectively rule out the possibility of considering fish tags, sector separation, measures for recreational accountability or any of a dozen other economic criteria which are ALL clearly articulated in the Council's Guidelines for Allocation.

While the Council may feel obligated to address allocation issues, and is being subjected to an extraordinary campaign by a recreational advocacy group, Amendment #28 as outlined in the Scoping Document is bad public policy and a profound disservice to the commercial, charter/headboat and recreational constituents who all deserve better adherence to TACs and a better quality fishing experience; NOT allocation for the sake of allocation.

Dear Doug:

Chefs Collaborative, a national network of chefs promoting sustainable practices in restaurants and foodservice, is working with Fish for America, a consumer protection campaign by commercial fishermen, the seafood industry, and consumers nationwide to preserve our country's supply of U.S. - caught fresh seafood.

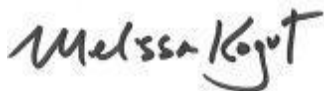

We're concerned that Gulf of Mexico fishery managers are considering reducing the amount of wild caught domestic seafood allocated to American consumers. These consumer reductions are not proposed for conservation reasons; it's about who has the right to catch the fish.

As a national chef network concerned about a sustainable food system, well-managed fisheries are crucial. In this case, data collection and enforcement to ensure federal fishing limits are never exceeded, are appropriately portioned, and provide consumer access to domestic, wild-caught seafood all the time.

If there is a problem with the health of the fishery, then additional regulations are necessary. But, if the consumer catch is taken away from commercial fishermen, we all feel the effect – the fishermen, the fishery and restaurants serving U.S. - caught wild seafood.

The responsibility to take care of our fisheries belongs to all of us. But the fisheries belong to everyone and access needs to be allocated fairly.

Sincerely,

Melissa Kogut

Dear Chairman Boyd:

Please accept the following comments from the Recreational Fishing Alliance Forgotten Coast Chapter (RFA Forgotten Coast Chapter) regarding the release of SEDAR 31 and necessary action items for the June 2013 Gulf of Mexico Fishery Management Council (Council) meeting. Though not accepted or rejected in the Review Panel Report, the SEDAR 31 report continues to support strong and continued growth of the Gulf of Mexico Red Snapper resource. A consistent trend of rebuilding as reflected through both total biomass and spawning stock biomass increases can be indisputably observed since the 1980's. Corresponding declines in fishing mortality can also be observed throughout this time series.

While the continued rebuilding of the Gulf of Mexico red snapper can be described as a conservation success, the increased availability of red snapper, particularly to the recreational sector, is proving to be a significant management challenge. Moreover, density dependant factors are becoming increasing important factor in achieving rebuilding objectives of the Reef Fish fishery management plan. The RFA Forgotten Coast Chapter hopes the Gulf Council takes swift and decisive action to confront these challenges and offers the following recommendations.

Move Toward Regional Management for Gulf of Mexico Red Snapper

The findings of SEDAR 31 continue to support a two-stock model for the Gulf of Mexico red snapper. Observations in genetic testing, otolith micro-constituent analysis and life history characteristics clearly indicate distinctions between red snapper found in the eastern and western regions of the Gulf. Based on these findings and varying needs of the fishing communities throughout the Gulf, the RFA Forgotten Chapter encourages of the Gulf Council to finish voting on regional management at the June meeting in Pensacola, FL. It is important that implementation begin immediately for regional management; this would also include the rescinding of Amendment 30B.

Revisit Commercial/Recreational Allocation

Successful rebuilding of the Gulf of Mexico red snapper fishery has afforded a 9.3-million pound quota for both the commercial and recreational sectors under the original 51%-49% allocation scheme. The RFA Forgotten Coast Chapter supports revisiting this allocation scheme; as the red snapper stock(s) continue to rebuild, there have been numerous statements made on-record by commercial representatives about the drop in market price for red snapper when the commercial quota exceeds 5 million pounds.

Recreational Fishing Alliance Forgotten Coast Chapter
311 Nutmeg St, Port St Joe, FL 32456
www.joinrfa.com

Considering the 51/49 allocation and the market loss experienced by the commercial fishing industry when more than 5 million pounds of red snapper floods the consumer market, the RFA Forgotten Coast Chapter would ask that the commercial sector be capped at the 5-million pound mark, and that all harvest above that threshold be allocated based on an allocation scheme that sets 90% of the quota to the recreational sector and 10% to the commercial sector.

The two tiered allocation approach will allow the commercial/recreational allocation to gradually shift toward the recreational sector as the stock rebuilds. Such an approach would protect the commercial sector from potential overages in the recreational sector while providing a mechanism that will address the growing concern about increased availability causing ever decreasing recreational red snapper seasons.

Setting Recreational Regulations

RFA Forgotten Coast Chapter encourages the Gulf Council to set the recreational seasons at least 1 year in advance. This would provide some stability in the recreational red snapper fishery. SEDAR 31 projects that stock levels will go down over the next few years as the strong 2004, 2005, and 2006 year classes move out of the fishery. Long-term projections generated in SEDAR 31 however show continued long-term growth and rebuilding even without the influence of those strong year classes and with only average recruitment.

That is why we believe the Council should avoid managing the recreational sector in an impulsive, yo-yo manner that is tied to the year-to-year stock level. As the stock continues to rebuild, growth will not be in a straight line but the overall trend will be in an upward direction. The overall health of the recreational red snapper fishery is dependent upon stable and predictable regulations.

The RFA Forgotten Coast Chapter also encourages the Gulf Council to schedule an assessment update for red snapper in 2014 – obviously, a full stock assessment in 2014 would be preferable. The amount of new artificial reefs going out yearly and especially with BP restore money should help increase essential fish habitat for red snapper and will increase populations immensely. This mitigation could dampen stock level declines.

Oil Rig Removal

SEDAR 31 indicates that density dependant factors are impacting the speed at which red snapper in the Gulf of Mexico rebuild. Predation and habitat are the two most important density dependant factors limiting red snapper rebuilding. Active reef building efforts throughout the Gulf continue to supply more available habitat for red snapper thereby increasing growth and overall stock productivity by reducing competition for habitat. Yet, removal of decommissioned oil rigs with explosives destroys red snapper habitat and kills fish.

RFA Forgotten Coast Chapter encourages the Council to request a status report from NOAA Fisheries on their evaluation of establishing oil rigs as essential fish habitat as defined under Magnuson. There is no question that oil rig removal with the use of explosives is having a negative impact on red snapper rebuilding. Even if the impact is minor, the Gulf Council should pursue all options to stop this action because it is an avoidable and unnecessary source of mortality on red snapper and red snapper habitat.

It is important for the Council to include investigation into the magnitude of mortality associated with rig removal using explosives in the statement of work for the 2014 assessment update.

Until we can get the Magnuson-Stevens Act sensibly and responsibly amended on behalf of both the fish and our fishermen, our only hope is for better stock assessments (more frequent assessments as planned now for 2014), improved recreational data collection, regional management implemented at this meeting (including rescinding 30b), and to get the allocation right where the recreational charter for-hire and headboat sectors are once again fishing and supporting our coastal economies. RFA Forgotten Chapter believes these items must be the priority for the Council at their June 2013 meeting. These items must be discussed and voted on. All other items such as headboats exempted special permits, sector separation, for-hire days at sea, intersector trading and the likes can be postponed to future meetings if necessary.

It's time to prioritize, and it's imperative that members of the Gulf Council get these things finished –accomplish something, stop working on the same things over and over and adding more tasks to the agenda without finishing one damn thing. Please finish voting on these four critically important items at this next meeting in Pensacola.

Respectfully submitted,

Tom Adams

Testimony of the Southeastern Fisheries Association concerning the reallocation of Gulf of Mexico red snapper

Southeastern Fisheries Association Inc. (SFA) is a 501 c 6 non-profit fisheries trade association founded in 1952 in Jacksonville, Florida. The association has over 350 companies and hundreds of fishermen associated with its organization as well as several other trade associations who participate under the SFA umbrella. SFA has active members in every fishery in the southeast and in every sector from harvesters, dockside facilities, processors, distributors and retailers. SFA's purpose is to preserve the fishing industry and its culture in a legal and ethical manner.

SFA proudly acknowledges every commercial fish harvested in Florida and most other Gulf States is required to be recorded on some type of a Trip Ticket showing species, date and location of catch, type of gear and other data points used to manage commercial fishermen. In addition to trip ticket requirements, all wholesale seafood dealers keep federal records showing who they bought the fish from and who they sold it to. It's called "one step forward and one step back" and was implemented under the 2001 Congressional Anti-terrorism Act in order to trace the food supply in the United States. When economists analyze data required from the commercial fishing sector they are using accurate, contemporaneous records to validate how many fish were caught, what they are worth at the dock and throughout the chain of distribution. The trip tickets and other required federal reports are not manipulated. These required records accurately describe the transactions of the harvesting and first receiver sectors of the seafood industry.

Conversely, there are not adequate or contemporaneous catch records for anglers. We are informed a new NOAA system to estimate angler caught fish might improve their database, but we do not believe it will provide adequate empirical data necessary to manage red snapper.

SFA recognizes efforts to reallocate Gulf of Mexico red snapper from the non-boating public, including young, old, male and female consumers who desire heart-healthy local fish and gift them to sport fishermen. Some might view a recent red snapper economic report by NOAA Southeast Science Center as justification for the Gulf Council to take red snapper from accountable fishermen and gift them to unaccountable fishermen. Such a biased, purely political action would be a disservice to fishermen, their communities, consumers and to the nation.

In the second sentence of the Abstract on page one of the Southeast Fisheries Science Center's report entitled, "Is the 2012 allocation of red snapper in the Gulf of Mexico economically efficient?" NOAA's Juan J. Agar and David W. Carter clearly write,

“THE MAGNITUDE OF THE REALLOCATION AND THE EXTENT TO WHICH NATIONAL ECONOMIC BENEFITS CAN BE INCREASED CAN ONLY BE CONFIDENTLY DETERMINED WITH ADDITIONAL RESEARCH, IMPROVEMENTS IN THE QUALITY OF EXISTING DATA COLLECTIONS AND NEW DATA COLLECTIONS.”
(emphasis added)

The authors honestly and clearly acknowledge that lack of additional data makes their Southeast Science Center report less than robust. One thing missing in the Science Center’s report is a discussion on how the questions were posed and recorded for their survey instrument. But even if that information becomes available; there is no way to validate the extent to which national benefits can be determined as affirmed by the authors on page one of Abstract of the report.

SFA hopes NOAA’s policy-makers in Washington, D.C. ask, “Why did the Southeast Science Center report only use dockside value for seafood when we all know the economic impact to the nation reaches its highest level when that seafood is sold several times increasing the value at every stage of the processing and distribution channels?” SFA asks, “What is the true economic value of Gulf of Mexico red snapper from the boat to the throat?”

Any Gulf of Mexico red snapper economic report that compares dockside value of commercially harvested red snapper with every penny an angler spends to catch a red snapper is fatally flawed. There may be economic models that do not use the value of commercial seafood all the way to the consumer, but all models pertaining to fish management must use the commercial value at least through the processing sector, which is still below final value. Using only dockside value to determine the total value of the Gulf of Mexico red snapper commercial fishing industry is disingenuous.

The Southeast Fisheries Science Center used the “willingness to pay (WTP)” methodology for analysis of the Gulf of Mexico red snapper resource. The WTP methodology has some economic basis except for the fact that economic researchers have never discovered how to separate fishing trips from fish caught or how to ensure that respondents are giving honest answers. There is no paper trail for anglers to compare with the paper trail of commercial red snapper harvest. It seems impossible to survey anglers and get a believable answer to the question, “How much are you willing to pay to catch a red snapper?”

A major issue that merits extensive discussion is matching "ability to pay" with "willingness to pay." WTP methods have been used to ask people about willingness to pay for something they don't plan to use - like a wilderness in Alaska or Fort Jefferson National Park. A big number would evolve if the researcher extrapolated to the entire population - even foreign tourists can provide numbers that get large in aggregate.

WTP methodology, to us, is like a puff of smoke. If people are asked what they would be willing to pay above current costs for another trip, they will reply with a number from zero to something positive. If the folks being surveyed figured out what was going on, the successive answers would probably get smaller.

Fishery economists should ask anglers, "How many red snapper need to be reserved for sport fishing in the Gulf of Mexico to keep you interested in the possibility of catching some?" Suppose that number is five million pounds. That amount is attainable within the near future. NOAA recognizes the red snapper stock is not overfished based on an updated reef fish stock benchmark analysis which should increase the quota. The increased in quota that the Council's Scientific and Statistical Committee allows, must be allocated on an equitable basis to the anglers, charter/party boat fishermen and the commercial sector who provides seafood to people who enjoy eating red snapper even if they have no desire or opportunity to catch one. Every increase in the total allowable catch provides significant economic benefits to the region and the nation.

Willingness to pay - should not be an acceptable methodology for gathering data, because it's subjective and not backed up by objective data. The key thing to focus on is how much spending related to sport fishing goes into worker's pockets, not the total amount of economic activity (because much of it can be passing through).

For instance, retail spending is a key sector related to sport fishing. One of the members of SFA's Economic Report Evaluation Committee using 2009 data estimated it takes roughly $180,000 in retail spending to generate about $28,000 worth of labor income for retail workers. Yet $180,000 worth of commercial seafood (in ex-vessel terms) would result in roughly four times more labor income for somebody (fisherman, support sector, etc.) As the fish are sold to processors, distributors, retailers/restaurants and finally to consumers, there is much more value and labor income added. Is this aspect adequately addressed by the NOAA's Gulf of Mexico red snapper economic model? Is there a web site to review this element that SFA feels is critical in determining real value to the economy of the Gulf States?

There are three primary ways to increase the economic activity of a region.

1. Develop/exploit more regional resources.
2. Bring in more money from outside the region (i.e. export more),
3. Increase the multiplier of spending occurring within the region.

Selling fish outside the Gulf of Mexico region is an export which brings in new money. That is how commercial fishing brings in new money. Likewise, a nonresident coming to fish in the sport fishery is similar to an export in that it brings new money into the region. A lot of nonresidents come to the Gulf of Mexico, but how many come specifically to fish offshore? How does the Science Center's report deal with this?

Any assumption regarding a nonresident's intent for coming to the Gulf of Mexico is absolutely crucial. Would the person have still come if not for the fishing? Some come only for the fishing, but we believe most do it as part of a larger itinerary. If researchers make the assumption that most sportsmen come only to fish, and then they use all the travel/lodging/food expenses from their entire visit it greatly inflates the sport fishing expenditures. This leads to a much larger value per pound for sport-caught fish than can be quantified or justified.

Another key assumption is the purchase of a boat. Would that boat have been purchased if there were less fish or less of one particular species? Researchers could address that question by reviewing historical boat registration data from the Gulf States.

They could analyze the total number of sport boats categorized as “offshore sport fishing boats” and then compare that with historical sport fish harvest volume. We believe the number of boats is considerably higher over the past twenty year period, while the harvest volume per boat has gone down dramatically.

If the harvest of red snapper per boat is down while at the same time the number of sport fishing boats has increased: it calls into question the assumption that allocating more red snapper to sport fishermen would generate more boat sales. Sales of big ticket items like boats are important economic drivers, but the assumption that more red snapper for sport fishermen would result in more boat sales needs to be proved with quantifiable scientific data. Many other factors affect boat sales, such as average disposable income, mooring/storage costs, inventory and demographics.

There is a large amount of “leakage” associated with many sport fishing expenditures. It takes a lot of retail sales to generate one job, and the majority of the sport fishing sales likely comes from products imported from outside the region and from foreign nations. SFA suggests researchers investigate assumptions related to key support sectors (i.e. retail, lodging and travel) in economic models that estimate the sport fishing value per pound.

Researchers should investigate the nature of sport expenditures, and make adjustments that account for the magnitude of impact generated by spending assumptions they use in their models. Think about how the money is spent by sport fishermen versus commercial fishermen. What are the differences in terms of how much of the economic activity generated is retained by Gulf of Mexico residents and how much of the spending is “passing through” on previously purchased imported equipment.

One very important fact hardly ever discussed is that the commercial fleet must have a basic harvest volume to exist. There has to be a balance. More red snapper gifted to the sportfishing sector doesn’t mean a proportional increase in jobs. Any allocation decision must weigh the expected additional benefit to industries that benefit from the sport fishing sector that would occur with greater access to red snapper against the possible loss of the commercial red snapper fleet and all the sectors which depend upon it (if allocations are set below the breakeven point for the commercial fleet).

Any economic assessment of the commercial fishing industry should use the value of red snapper through the processing, distribution sector at the very least and preferably through the retail sector. There is significant economic merit in measuring the total retail value of an all American supply chain. This aspect relates to the third method of economic development stated previously: generating economic activity by increasing the economic multiplier. When U.S. consumers buy red snapper harvested from the Gulf of Mexico (instead of imported fish), they increase the economic multiplier. The commercial fishing sector’s economic impact is much larger than the ex-vessel value being used in the Science Center’s Report.

We must preserve and protect the commercial allocation of red snapper for the sake of the fleet and the net economic benefit to the nation.

There is an argument that it's easier to switch species as a sport fisherman than as a commercial fisherman. The costs involved in switching commercial fisheries are significant and access to other fisheries is often limited or not allowed because participation has been capped.

SFA believes economic models currently used are unable to arrive at a reliable assessment of the commercial fishing industry. This is because NOAA researchers are unable or unwilling to allow a price tag on many important aspects of commercial fishing such as cultural and traditional values, which together, affect and influence America's society as much or more than the sport fishing industry.

Imagine that tomorrow all commercial fishing in a given area is stopped. The nation loses the local fish supply to the retail market, fish shops, supermarkets, restaurants, etc. Consumers would have to buy more imported seafood. Such an action creates almost unsolvable social problems with unemployed fishermen – good people who don't render easily to shift to other trades, their families, communities, and many other negative occurrences. And what about all the infrastructure serving commercial fisheries: boat-building and repair, production and marketing of fishing gear, mechanical, electronic, and electric equipment, and more...? Lot of losses (costs) to the society. How many $$$? Plenty.

Imagine that tomorrow all recreational fishing in a given area is stopped? We'll see a lot of angry and frustrated sport fishermen. Most people seeking recreational occupations could move to other water related businesses, but not without great angst and family disruptions. The individual sport fishermen, instead of spending money on fishing tackle and bait might spend it on underwater cameras, binoculars, and plenty of other equipment. They will still be headed to the seashore and all outdoors, staying at hotels and motels, finding other sport-type entertainment, and, as before, spend the money they can afford for recreation. No great loss to the society's purse, just a great loss to the honest businesses who currently serve sport fishing.

The two scenarios show aspects of red snapper reallocation that are easy to overlook or sweep under the table when NOAA and any fishery management council tries to solve complex socio-economic problems with bookkeeper's arithmetic.

SFA and most citizens believe the Gulf of Mexico red snapper resource belongs to nation, not to any sector that seeks all the red snapper for themselves. The allocation between user groups must be fair and equitable as mandated under the Magnuson-Stevens Act and the United States Constitution.

Sport fishing is an important and major economic driver in the Gulf States, but so is the commercial seafood industry. Southeastern Fisheries Association and the entire commercial fishing industry request a thorough investigation and explanation of key assumptions, primary data, and methods used in the Science Center's economic analysis.

Additionally the commercial fishing industry requests the analysis of commercial fishing in the Gulf of Mexico as well as the South Atlantic Council's region be extended to include the dealers, processors, distributors and retailers who benefit from selling commercially caught red snapper. Less red snapper allocated to the commercial fishing industry has a direct negative impact on these basic economic sectors and the allied industries that support them.

Finally, the southeastern commercial fishing industry requests the council investigate the impact of past allocation decisions on both the sport and commercial fleet. The council must understand that reallocating more red snapper to the sport fleet could have a disproportionately large negative impact on the commercial fleet: whereas the additional benefit to the sport fleet is likely to be marginal so long as other sport fish species are available.

Like other assumptions briefly discussed in this testimony, the expectation that allocation decisions affect the sport and commercial fleet in the same manner needs to be quantified in much more detail.

Respectfully submitted,

Bob Jones
